SO 7 — The Sacrifice (Social Seven counter-type)

MEDIUM CONFIDENCE

This report is designed as a session prep tool — organized around the debrief conversation you'll have with your client, not around how the assessment engine arrived at its hypothesis. Read Section 1 for the quick read. Use Sections 2 through 5 as a companion during the debrief itself. Section 6 offers contingency guidance depending on how the conversation unfolds.

THE READ

This client presents in the language of devoted service: 'warm, generous, devoted to the people and causes I care about, tireless' — and others confirm that picture as 'selfless, always there.' The greatest strength they name is inspiring people toward something bigger than themselves, which is a dead giveaway for the SO 7 Sacrifice counter-type. The shadow they identify — burnout — is the precise consequence of that pattern operating without recognition.

The counter-type confirmation here is strong. Everything about the Stage 0 language reads as Type 2 on the surface, which is exactly what SO 7 produces. The structural differentiator — Frustration Object Relations vs. Rejection — gives the hypothesis its backbone, and stress/security architecture confirmed cleanly for Type 7.

The one live ambiguity to carry in: the Habit of Mind question leaned toward Type 2 (flattery, tracking others' approval), not Type 7 (scanning for possibility, reframing difficulty). That's not a small thing. It keeps Type 2 genuinely alive as an alternative, and the motivational probe — do you give to keep the world full, or to be needed? — is the question the session needs to answer.

GOING IN

- Confidence is MEDIUM — architecturally well-supported for Type 7 via stress, security, and Object Relations, but the Habit of Mind unconfirmed and Type 2 holding meaningful structural presence. Don't lead with certainty; lead with curiosity.
- The client will almost certainly resonate with Type 2 language more than Type 7 language on first pass — this is the defining feature of the SO 7 counter-type. Expect recognition of the giving, the selflessness, the devotion. Be prepared to name why the standard Seven description may not land and why that doesn't disconfirm the hypothesis.
- Low Center confidence (Head 12, Heart 10 — gap of 2) is expected and diagnostic for this counter-type. Do not treat it as a weakness in the read; treat it as evidence that the Heart-inflated presentation is doing exactly what SO 7 produces.
- The Habit of Mind ambiguity is the primary diagnostic lever. Come in knowing the distinction: Seven's Habit of Mind is planning and reframing toward future possibility. Two's is flattery and tracking approval. That distinction, surfaced experientially, is how you land the type.
- No final open response was provided — no self-typing or contextual flags to manage.

1A · COUNTER-TYPE CONSIDERATIONS

WHY THIS MATTERS

- The SO 7 Sacrifice counter-type is one of the most commonly mistyped presentations in the system. Clients with this pattern often come in already identifying as Type 2, have tested as Type 2 on other instruments, and have built an entire self-narrative around being a giver. Introducing Type 7 as the hypothesis requires a careful and patient counter-type frame.
- The standard Type 7 description — pleasure-seeking, scattered, future-oriented, avoiding pain through distraction — will likely feel foreign or even slightly insulting to this client. They will not recognize themselves in it. This is not pushback; it is the counter-type operating correctly.
- What makes the SO 7 frame clinically important is the growth pathway: the work is not about becoming more generous or less self-interested (as it would be for a Two). The work is about recognizing that the outward gift of joy is still a deflection from sitting with limitation, pain, and inner life — and that the tirelessness has a cost.
- The burnout signal is key: both SO 7 and Type 2 burn out, but from different roots. Seven burns out from perpetual outward motion that avoids inward stillness. Two burns out from endless giving that goes unreciprocated. The texture of the burnout is the diagnostic clue.

STANDARD VS. COUNTER-TYPE PRESENTATION

- Standard Type 7 centers on personal pleasure, stimulation, and freedom — collecting experiences, reframing difficulty, keeping options open. The SO 7 counter-type redirects this entirely: the joy becomes a gift to others, the freedom shows up as inspiration, the stimulation is the group's aliveness rather than personal satisfaction.
- Both standard Seven and SO 7 counter-type share the same deep architecture: Frustration Object Relations, Positive Outlook Harmonic, and the same stress/security movement (toward 1 under stress, toward 5 in security). The motivation beneath the giving is the distinguishing feature: abundance-seeking expressed outward, not love-seeking.

- The SO 7 counter-type and Type 2 share the Positive Outlook Harmonic response style — both reframe difficulty, both keep things upbeat, both serve the group's emotional tone. The distinguishing axis is Object Relations (Frustration vs. Rejection) and the core question: is the giving an expression of abundance, or an attempt to secure belonging?
- What they share motivationally: a genuine love of people, a devotion to causes, and a real capacity for warmth. What differs: the Two experiences the world as a place where love must be earned through service; the Seven experiences the world as a place meant to be rich and full — and the SO 7 makes that richness a communal offering.

COACHING NOTES

- When you introduce the Type 7 hypothesis, don't lead with 'pleasure-seeking' or 'avoiding pain.' Lead with the quality they already named: inspiring people toward something bigger. Ask them what it feels like to be the person who holds that vision for others — and what happens when the vision runs dry.
- Name the counter-type explicitly but gently: 'There's a version of Type 7 that looks almost nothing like the standard description — someone who turns that energy entirely outward as a gift to others. That's the pattern I'm curious about with you.' This gives the client a foothold without requiring them to reject their self-image.
- If the client pushes toward Type 2, don't resist it immediately — use it. Ask: 'When you imagine someone who gives because they need to be needed — does that feel true? Or does the giving feel more like... this is what I have to offer, this is how I show up?' Let them find the distinction themselves.

2 • DEBRIEFING CORE MOTIVATION AND WORLDVIEW

How to present the heart of the type and connect it to their own words.

THE CORE PATTERN

- Type 7's core motivation is toward fullness, richness, and aliveness — and away from pain, limitation, and the experience of being trapped or deprived. This is a Head center type whose anxiety is managed pre-emptively through forward motion, possibility, and reframing difficulty into opportunity.
- The Frustration Object Relations pattern means Sevens carry an unspoken sense that what's available is never quite enough — there's always something better, fuller, more alive just ahead. The SO 7 counter-type redirects this frustration outward: the not-enough-ness becomes a drive to make the world richer for others.
- The Positive Outlook Harmonic means this client will tend to reframe difficulty, keep things upbeat, and resist sitting with what's painful or limiting — both in themselves and in the groups they care for. The inspirational quality others observe is this Harmonic at its best.
- The growth edge for Type 7 is the capacity to be present to limitation, pain, and inner life without deflecting into possibility or action. For the SO 7, this looks specifically like: allowing the world to be incomplete without immediately trying to fill it for others.

WHAT THEIR RESPONSES SHOWED

- 'The ability to inspire people toward something bigger than themselves' as their greatest strength is SO 7 language at its purest — the Epicurean energy fully externalized as vision and gift to the group.
- 'Devoted to the people and causes I care about' signals the Social instinct's organizational axis: this client's energy flows toward collective purpose, not individual relationships or personal security.

- 'Burnout' as the problematic quality is the honest shadow of this pattern — and it's worth noting they named it directly, which suggests some level of self-awareness about the cost of the tirelessness.
- 'Always there — sometimes to a fault' is how others experience the pattern: the presence is genuine, the reliability is real, and the 'sometimes to a fault' is where the cost lives. This is the doorway into the motivational exploration.

COACHING NOTES

- When presenting the worldview, start with what they named as their greatest strength — the ability to inspire toward something bigger — and reflect it back as a genuine gift before asking what it costs. Lead with the positive before you move toward the shadow.
- Be careful not to pathologize the giving. For an SO 7, the outward generosity is not a defense mechanism in the way it is for a Two — it's an authentic expression of abundance. The work is about recognizing the limits of that abundance and developing a relationship with limitation.
- The burnout signal is your best entry point into the worldview conversation. Ask about a specific burnout experience — not the concept of burnout, but one real moment where they ran dry. That specific story will tell you a great deal about whether this is Type 7's avoidance of limitation or Type 2's depletion from unreciprocated giving.

Try asking: 'When you think about a time you hit the wall — truly burned out — what was the feeling underneath the depletion? Was it more like: I've been running so fast and I need to stop? Or more like: I gave so much and it wasn't enough, or wasn't seen?'

3 · DEBRIEFING PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

What to expect and what to watch for as you walk through type patterns.

CENTERS OF INTELLIGENCE

Body Center		0 / 18
Heart Center		0 / 18
Head Center		0 / 18

LIKELY TO RESONATE EASILY

- Genuine optimism and the ability to see possibility where others see obstacles
- Quick thinking, versatility, and a gift for synthesizing ideas across domains
- Real warmth and enthusiasm that energizes groups and relationships

MAY TAKE MORE CAREFUL UNPACKING

- Scattered attention — too many open loops, too many half-started projects, too many possibilities
- Avoidance of pain, limitation, and commitment that would require you to stay when things get hard

- A tendency to reframe difficulty toward the positive so quickly that real feelings don't get processed

MAY BE HARDEST TO SEE

- The hardest thing for this client to see is likely the avoidance operating beneath the tirelessness. Being 'always there,' inspiring others, holding the vision — these are genuine and good, and they also keep the client perpetually outward-facing. The inner life, the places of limitation and pain, don't get much room. That's the Seven's characteristic move, and it's very hard to see when the outward motion feels this purposeful and meaningful.
- The Habit of Mind ambiguity is worth sitting with: the client identified more with Type 2's attention pattern (tracking others' needs and approval) than with Type 7's reframing and planning. It's worth exploring whether there's an approval-seeking or connection-securing dimension beneath the generosity that the client hasn't fully examined.
- The gap between 'tireless' (self-description) and 'sometimes to a fault' (others' description) is the shadow in plain sight. The client named burnout as the problematic quality, which shows awareness — but whether they've connected that to an internal pattern of avoidance or limitation-refusal is worth probing.

HOW THE CLIENT APPEARS TO MOVE — THE THREE FRAMEWORK SIGNALS

These are cross-referenced patterns that showed up consistently in their responses. Each offers a different lens on the type — worth weaving in conversationally rather than introducing as categories.

SOCIAL STYLE — COMPLIANT

- The Compliant answer is the primary structural signal supporting counter-type mode — standard Type 7 is Assertive. For this client, the Compliant presentation shows up in the language of devotion, selflessness, and being 'always there' — a posture of accommodation to the group's needs rather than self-assertion.
- Compliant types (1, 2, 6) move toward others or toward their inner standards as a way of managing the world. For the SO 7, this Compliant energy is expressed as showing up for the cause, for the people — the outward movement is genuine but also keeps the client from having to turn inward.
- Worth watching in session: the client may tend to accommodate your framing, agree with interpretations, and reflect back what seems expected. This is the Compliant pattern in live action — watch for moments when they shift from genuine recognition to social agreement.

Weave in: 'I'm curious — in the relationships or causes you're most devoted to, is there a sense that you need to keep showing up in order to keep things right, or does it feel more like a free choice to give?'

EMOTIONAL STYLE — POSITIVE OUTLOOK

- The Positive Outlook Harmonic means this client tends to reframe difficulty, emphasize possibility, and resist sitting in what's painful or incomplete. The inspirational quality others name is this Harmonic at full expression.

- In conflict or challenge, the Positive Outlook response typically involves reframing: finding the upside, seeing the opportunity, keeping things moving forward. This is a genuine strength — and also a way of not staying with difficulty long enough to integrate it.
- For an SO 7, the Positive Outlook shows up specifically as keeping the group's hope alive. This client may find themselves absorbing others' despair or discouragement and converting it into energy — a role that is both meaningful and exhausting.

Weave in: 'When the people you're inspiring are struggling or losing hope — what happens in you? Do you find yourself moving quickly to help them find the light, or can you sometimes just sit in it with them?'

ATTACHMENT STYLE — FRUSTRATION

- The Frustration Object Relations pattern is the clearest structural differentiator between Type 7 and Type 2 in this dataset. Frustration types (1, 4, 7) carry an implicit sense that what's available is never quite right or quite enough — and they respond by pursuing something better, fuller, or more aligned.
- For this client, the Frustration pattern likely shows up as a sense that the cause isn't advancing fast enough, the people aren't quite reaching their potential, the world isn't yet as rich and alive as it could be. The tirelessness may be, in part, a response to this chronic sense of not-yet-there.
- This is distinct from the Rejection pattern (Type 2), where the core wound is around being unloved or unwanted. Frustration types don't primarily fear rejection — they fear being trapped in something insufficient. That distinction is clinically important and worth surfacing carefully.

Weave in: 'Is there a sense, when you're working toward something — a cause, a vision, a person's growth — that it's never quite arrived? Like there's always another level, another possibility just ahead?'

COACHING NOTES FOR THIS SECTION

- Walk through the framework signals in the order above — Compliant, Positive Outlook, Frustration — and let the client respond to each before moving on. The Frustration signal is the most diagnostically important but also the most surprising; give it room.
- Watch for the moment when the client starts to explain or justify the tirelessness. When explanation shows up, consider naming it gently: 'I notice you moved into explaining just now — what's happening inside as we look at this pattern together?'
- The body probe below is important for this client specifically. Someone described as 'tireless' and 'always there' may have a complicated relationship with stillness and rest. The body is often where the cost of the pattern shows up most honestly.

Try asking: 'Can you bring your attention to your body for a moment — right now, as we're talking? Notice whether there's any tension, restlessness, or pull toward movement or action. What does your body feel like when it's fully at rest?

4 • DEBRIEFING INSTINCT AND SUBTYPE

Their particular flavor of Type 7, and why it matters.

INSTINCT RANKING

SO 7 — THE SACRIFICE (SOCIAL SEVEN COUNTER-TYPE) — HOW THE INSTINCT SHAPES THE TYPE

- The Social instinct organizes this client's Seven energy entirely around the group, the cause, and the collective vision. The personal pleasure-seeking that characterizes standard Seven is mostly absent — what remains is a tireless dedication to making the world richer for others.
- The Social Seven's particular gift is the ability to inspire — to take their natural sense of abundance and possibility and make it contagious. 'The ability to inspire people toward something bigger than themselves' is this subtype doing what it does best.
- The sacrifice dimension of this subtype means the client's own needs, pleasures, and inner life are consistently subordinated to the group's vitality. This is the primary driver of burnout — not selfishness, not lack of care, but a genuine orientation toward others that leaves the self unfed.
- The counter-type quality means this client experiences their Seven-ness as giving rather than getting, as service rather than pleasure, as contribution rather than freedom. The standard Seven's escape from limitation becomes this client's drive to lift others past their limitations.

WHY THIS SUBTYPE CAN BE EASY TO MISS

- This subtype is almost universally read as Type 2 on first pass — the selflessness, the devotion, the 'always there,' the burnout. Without the counter-type frame, the type hypothesis would likely settle on Two without serious question.
- The standard Seven description — pleasure-seeking, option-keeping, future-scanning, avoiding pain through distraction — will not resonate with this client. They may actively push back on it. That pushback is not evidence against the hypothesis; it is evidence for the counter-type confirmation.
- The Habit of Mind unconfirmed note (lean toward Type 2's attention pattern) adds to the easy-to-miss quality. This client's attention does track toward others' needs and approval — which is real and present — but the motivational root beneath it is worth careful excavation.
- The burnout is the most telling diagnostic signal. A client this identified with giving and service who is also burning out is almost always in SO 7 or Type 2 territory. The texture of what drives the giving is where the diagnostic work happens.

COACHING NOTES

- Don't introduce the subtype name first — introduce the pattern. Describe someone who takes their natural love of possibility and joy and turns it entirely outward as a gift to others. Ask if that resonates before you name it.

- When the Sacrifice language lands, follow it immediately with: 'And what gets sacrificed?' This is the growth-edge question. The client may not have language for it yet.
- If the client is drawn to the Type 2 alternative, you can hold both simultaneously: 'I think there's genuine Two energy in how you relate to people. The question I want to sit with you on is: what's the root of the giving? Is it abundance expressing itself outward, or is it connection being secured?' Let them live in the question.

Try asking: 'When you're most in flow — doing what you do best, inspiring people toward something bigger — what are you experiencing? Is it more like: this is how I show up for others, this is my gift? Or is there something for you in it too — a feeling of aliveness, richness, expansion?'

5 • DEBRIEFING WINGS, LINES, AND RESOURCES

What they have available, especially under pressure.

STRESS MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 1

- Under stress, Type 7 moves toward Type 1 — becoming critical, exacting, and perfectionistic in a way that feels foreign to their usual ease and generosity. For this client, the 'tireless' and 'always there' presentation likely carries an inner critic that emerges under depletion: not good enough, not doing enough, the vision isn't advancing fast enough.
- The client confirmed the Type 1 stress movement (BOTH_MORE_A) — they identified more strongly with the critical/perfectionistic pattern than with Type 8's controlling/demanding pattern. This is clean Type 7 architecture. In session, it's worth asking whether the burnout is accompanied by increased self-criticism rather than anger.
- The coaching angle here is developing awareness of the inner critic as a stress signal — the moment the generous, inspiring quality contracts into judgment is the moment to ask: what is my system actually needing right now?

Try asking: 'When you're at your most depleted — really in the burnout zone — what does the inner voice sound like? Is there a critical quality to it, like things aren't good enough, you're not doing enough? Or does it show up differently for you?'

SECURITY MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 5

- In security, Type 7 moves toward Type 5 — becoming focused, still, willing to go deep rather than wide. For someone as outward-facing and 'tireless' as this client, access to the Five's gifts (depth, concentration, inner stillness) is both unusual and genuinely nourishing.
- The client confirmed the Type 5 security movement (BOTH_MORE_A) — they recognized the still, focused, depth-oriented quality in themselves under conditions of safety. This is a meaningful resource signal: the capacity exists. The question is what conditions make it accessible.
- For the SO 7, the security movement often feels like a surprising relief — a moment when the need to inspire and give and show up for others falls away and something quieter and more self-contained becomes available. Helping the client identify those conditions is practical growth work.

Try asking: 'Can you think of a time when you felt genuinely safe and supported — and maybe a little less needed? What became available in you in that space? What did it feel like to not be holding the vision for a moment?'

WINGS — TYPE 6 AND TYPE 8

- Type 7 wings are Type 6 (Seven with a Six wing) and Type 8 (Seven with an Eight wing). These are meaningfully different expressions of the Seven pattern, and for the SO 7 counter-type, wing influence can shift the presentation noticeably.
- The Six wing adds loyalty, responsibility, and anxiety to the Seven pattern — a Seven with a Six wing is more community-oriented, more conscientious, and carries more doubt about whether things will work out. Given the client's 'devoted' language and 'always there' quality, a Six wing influence is worth exploring.
- The Eight wing adds directness, drive, and force to the Seven pattern — a Seven with an Eight wing is more assertive, more willing to push for the vision, more comfortable with confrontation. The 'tireless' quality could carry either wing's energy.
- Let the client lead the wings conversation. Ask about both without pushing toward either. The wing they identify with more strongly often points toward the area where their growth is currently most active.

Try asking: 'I'd like to describe two different flavors of how this pattern can show up — one that's more loyal and community-minded, sometimes a little worried; and one that's more driven and direct, comfortable pushing hard for what matters. Do either of those sound familiar? Which feels closer to how you typically operate?'

6 • IF THE CONVERSATION GOES SIDeways

What to do depending on how they receive the hypothesis.

IF THEY RESONATE STRONGLY

- When the client strongly resonates with the SO 7 or Type 7 hypothesis, resist the pull to validate and move on. Strong recognition is the beginning of the work, not the end — move immediately toward: 'So now that you can see it, where does it show up most in your life right now? Where does it cost you the most?'
- Strong resonance with the counter-type framing can sometimes be its own form of avoidance — the client understands the pattern conceptually but hasn't yet felt its weight. Watch for intellectual engagement without emotional landing, and gently invite: 'What does it feel like to see this in yourself?'

What would it mean for you to bring this pattern into full awareness — not just to understand it, but to actually change something about how you operate? What's the one thing you'd most want to shift?

IF THEY PUSH BACK OR DISAGREE

- The most likely pushback is toward Type 2 — 'I don't think I'm a Seven; I'm not about personal pleasure or fun or keeping options open. I just care about people.' Do not defend the hypothesis. Agree with the observation: 'You're right that the standard Seven description doesn't fit. Let me tell you why I'm curious about it anyway — and I want to hear what doesn't fit for you.'
- If the client pushes firmly toward Type 2, hold it genuinely: 'Type Two is a live possibility here, and it's worth exploring. The question I'd want us to sit with is: when you're giving — when you're inspired and inspiring others — what's the feeling underneath? Is it love being secured, or richness being shared?' Let the client answer from their own experience.
- If neither type resonates and the client feels misread, acknowledge it directly: 'The most important thing isn't getting the type right — it's finding the description that opens something up for you. Let's go back to your own words and start there.'

Most likely alternate type: Type 2 — The Helper

Key distinguishing question: The key question is: does giving feel like an expression of abundance (something you have and want to share), or an expression of need (something you do to secure love and belonging)?

IF THEY'RE CONFUSED OR NEED MORE CLARITY

- If the client is genuinely confused — neither type fully lands — find the foothold in what they did recognize. 'You mentioned the burnout felt true. Tell me more about that experience. What does the depletion feel like from the inside?' Specific experience is always more useful than framework comparison.
- Treat what doesn't fit as diagnostically useful, not as a failure: 'I'm curious about what didn't feel right. Sometimes the pieces that don't fit tell us the most. What was the part that felt most off?'

If you had to describe the deepest fear underneath the burnout — not the burnout itself, but what you're afraid would happen if you stopped giving, stopped showing up, stopped being the person who holds the vision — what would that fear say?

6A • TYPE CONFUSION OBSERVATION BLOCK

Types in question: Type 7 and Type 2. Use only if the client brought in their type confusion observation during the session.

WHAT TO DO WITH WHAT THEY BRING

- Bring the Habit of Mind data into the conversation explicitly but lightly: 'When we looked at how your attention tends to move, your answers pointed toward tracking others' needs and responses — noticing how people are receiving you — more than toward scanning for possibilities or reframing difficulty. I'm curious what you make of that.'

- Listen for the motivational texture beneath their description of the giving. Two says: 'I give because I love them and I need to be there for them.' Seven says: 'I give because the world is richer when I do — and because I can.' The difference is subtle and real. Don't name it for them; ask questions that let them arrive at it.
- It's legitimate and appropriate to close this session without a confirmed type. If both possibilities are still live after genuine exploration, name that honestly: 'I want to offer you both possibilities to live with this week. Not to decide between them, but to observe yourself — and notice which one you recognize when you're in the middle of a hard moment.'

IF THE OBSERVATION DIDN'T YIELD CLEAR DATA

- Type 7 is a Head center type whose anxiety is managed pre-emptively — from the inside it often doesn't feel like fear at all. It feels like forward motion, enthusiasm, vision. If the client doesn't recognize anxiety or fear as a driver, this is expected and doesn't disconfirm the hypothesis.
- The SO 7 counter-type's standard Seven features are genuinely suppressed in this subtype — the client is not holding back; the pattern is actually organized around service and giving in a way that feels authentic. Self-report on 'am I pleasure-seeking?' will reliably produce a no for this subtype.
- Type 2's Rejection Object Relations pattern tends to surface under pressure — in moments when the giving didn't land, wasn't seen, or wasn't reciprocated. If the client has difficulty accessing those moments or reframes them immediately into positive terms, that's more consistent with the Seven's Positive Outlook Harmonic than with Two's. Watch for reframing as a live behavior in session.

Try asking: 'I want to ask you about a specific moment when your giving — your showing up, your inspiring — wasn't received the way you hoped. What happened inside you in that moment? What did you do with it?'
