

HIVE ENNEAGRAM REPORT PREPARED FOR TEST SO7

Type 7

The Enthusiast

ABOUT THE ENNEAGRAM

The Enneagram is a powerful tool for personal and professional development that describes nine distinct ways of being in the world, each anchored by a core motivation that shapes how we think, feel, and act. We have access to all nine types within us, and one of them is our home base — the pattern that has been most consistent throughout our lives.

You are not your type. Your type is a strategy you developed early on to get love, safety, and belonging, and with awareness, you can work with that pattern rather than be run by it.

You are the final authority on your Enneagram type. This report offers a hypothesis about what your type might be, based on how you answered the questions in the assessment. Type discovery is a journey, and working with a qualified coach, therapist, or other trained professional can help you get clearer on your type should you wish to go deeper.

A NOTE ON THIS RESULT

Based on your responses, the pattern that appears most consistent with your experience is Type 7 — The Enthusiast. We encourage you to hold this as a hypothesis or theory that you get to test 'in the wild'. That's the fun part. If it resonates, wonderful. If it doesn't fully fit, that's important information too. Debriefing this report with a trained Enneagram coach or practitioner like Cai or Monique is a great place to explore what fits, what doesn't, and why.

WHAT WE NOTICED ABOUT YOU

Something that stands out immediately in what you shared is the word 'tireless' — and the way you described your strength as the ability to inspire people toward something bigger than themselves. That is not the language of someone primarily focused on their own comfort or pleasure; it's the language of someone whose energy is organized around a larger movement, a cause, a sense of what's possible for the people they love.

The pattern we noticed in your responses is consistent with what in the Enneagram is called a Social Seven — sometimes described as the 'Sacrifice' subtype. This is one of the Enneagram's more surprising pairings, because this particular version of Type 7 looks and feels almost nothing like the typical Seven description. Rather than chasing personal experiences or keeping options open for their own sake, this pattern redirects all of that Seven aliveness outward — into service, into vision, into giving others what they most need.

The cost of that redirection shows up in the word you used for your most problematic quality: 'burnout.' That's a meaningful clue. It points toward a pattern of giving without quite knowing how to receive, of moving toward others' needs with such tireless devotion that your own replenishment quietly goes unattended. That is worth exploring.

There is also a genuine question worth holding alongside this hypothesis: some of what you described — 'always there,' 'selfless,' attending deeply to what others need — resonates with Type 2 as well. Your Enneagram coach or practitioner will want to sit with you in that question, because the distinction between these two patterns is subtle and important, and you are the final authority on your own inner life.

YOUR TYPE AT A GLANCE

HOW YOU SEE THE WORLD

Sevens experience the world as a place full of fascinating possibilities — where limits, pain, and boredom are obstacles to be navigated around, and where the best strategy is to keep options open, keep moving, and keep the future bright. They tend to focus on what's next, what's interesting, and what could make this moment better.

CORE MOTIVATION

Sevens are driven by a deep need to experience life fully, stay free of painful limitation, and maintain the sense that something good is always ahead.

Underneath this drive is an early-formed belief that pain and constraint must be managed by staying several steps ahead — through planning, reframing, and keeping the future richer than the present. In daily life, this shows up as quick thinking, genuine enthusiasm, a talent for connecting ideas and people, and an almost reflexive pivot away from anything that feels heavy or stuck.

The cost, over time, is a kind of scattered aliveness — many experiences started, fewer fully tasted, and a quiet difficulty staying with what's actually here when it isn't what you'd hoped for.

In your responses: The Social Seven pattern is driven by a deep need to keep experience positive, full, and meaningful — but in this counter-type form, that drive gets aimed outward. Rather than filling your own life with possibility and pleasure, you fill others' lives with it. The description of your greatest strength — 'the ability to inspire people toward something bigger than themselves' — is consistent with this: a Seven who has made collective vision their primary source of aliveness. The word 'tireless' also points here. Sevens stay in motion — not necessarily physically, but energetically. There's a quality of not stopping, not running out, not letting limitation win. When that energy is channeled into service and devotion, as yours appears to be, the result looks selfless from the outside and feels purposeful from the inside — until it runs dry. 'Burnout' as the shadow is consistent with this pattern. The Social Seven's characteristic challenge is that in orienting so thoroughly toward others' experience, their own needs for rest, nourishment, and genuine interiority can go unmet — not because they don't matter, but because stopping long enough to attend to them feels like a kind of failure.

PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

Your core motivation doesn't just live in the background — it expresses itself as recognizable patterns of thinking, feeling, and behaving that show up consistently across different areas of your life.

THINKING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 7 — THE ENTHUSIAST

Attention goes first to what's possible, what's next, and what could make this moment more interesting. The mind moves quickly, connecting ideas across domains, generating options, planning pleasurable futures, and reframing anything that threatens to feel stuck.

You tend to hold many things open simultaneously — projects, plans, possibilities — because closing off options feels like losing freedom. Over time, this can produce brilliant synthesis alongside a scattered quality that makes depth and completion genuinely hard.

FEELING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 7 — THE ENTHUSIAST

Underneath the upbeat surface, fear runs the system — specifically, fear of being trapped, limited, or forced to stay with pain. Feelings that slow you down or feel heavy tend to get reframed, redirected, or distracted from quickly, often before you've fully noticed them.

Grief, sadness, fear, and limitation are the hardest to stay with, so they often accumulate in the background without being fully processed. The work is learning that feelings you've stayed with, including the hard ones, are what actually produce the full, rich experience of life you're reaching for.

BEHAVIOR PATTERNS OF A TYPE 7 — THE ENTHUSIAST

Sevens tend to be active, social, and forward-moving. Behavior often involves multiple projects, frequent plans, new experiences, and a generous enthusiasm that draws others in.

You move quickly, adapt easily, and often find yourself a few steps ahead of others. The shadow is over-commitment, avoidance of the difficult, and relationships or projects that suffer when the novelty wears off and the work of staying begins.

These patterns give rise to a distinctive set of strengths and challenges. The ones below are characteristic of Type 7 — you may recognize some more than others, and that recognition itself is useful information.

STRENGTHS

- + Genuine optimism and the ability to see possibility where others see obstacles
- + Quick thinking, versatility, and a gift for synthesizing ideas across domains
- + Real warmth and enthusiasm that energizes groups and relationships

CHALLENGES

- Scattered attention — too many open loops, too many half-started projects, too many possibilities
- Avoidance of pain, limitation, and commitment that would require you to stay when things get hard
- A tendency to reframe difficulty toward the positive so quickly that real feelings don't get processed

DEVELOPMENT TIPS

These practices can help you leverage your strengths and address the patterns that can hold you back.

1. Over-scheduling and future-focus are often signals that something in the present is being avoided. Ask yourself what you'd be feeling if you slowed down.
2. Work on one thing at a time, and practice finishing what you start. Depth of experience requires staying past the point where your attention wants to jump to the next thing.
3. When pain, fear, or limitation arrives, practice staying with it a little longer before reframing it. The full experience of a difficult feeling is often what lets it actually move through.
4. Notice the difference between excitement about possibility and genuine aliveness in the present. Both are real, but they serve different purposes.
5. Commit to something. Commitment closes doors, and for Sevens that can feel unbearable — but it's also where depth, love, and meaning actually live.

ABOUT THE INSTINCTS

Alongside your core type, you have a dominant instinct — one of three innate drives that shape where your survival energy goes first. The three instincts are Self-Preservation (SP), focused on safety, comfort, health, and the practical resources of daily life; One-to-One (SX), focused on deep, intense connection with specific people or experiences; and Social (SO), focused on belonging, group dynamics, and your place within a community.

All three instincts are present in everyone, but one instinct tends to run the show. Understanding your dominant instinct helps explain why two people of the same type can look quite different in practice — the instinct flavors how the core pattern shows up in your life.

YOUR INSTINCT — SOCIAL

Social Sevens are the counter-type — rather than indulging their appetite, they sacrifice personal desires in service of the group or a social ideal. There's a paradox here: to belong, they accept limits they'd otherwise resist.

This subtype channels expansive energy into visions for a better world, group projects, and causes. The shadow is over-extension from too many plans and a tendency to confuse social idealism with arriving at the good life they imagine.

In your responses: The Social instinct — the drive to belong, to contribute, to matter within a community or cause — appears to be your dominant organizing energy, and it shows up specifically in how you describe both your strength and your shadow. Inspiring people toward something bigger than themselves is a deeply social act: it's about the collective, about what we can build together, about being a meaningful presence in others' journeys. When the Social instinct combines with the Seven pattern in this way, the result is someone who can be extraordinarily galvanizing for others — but who may find it harder to identify what they personally need, want, or feel, independent of the group or cause they're serving. That's worth bringing into your session as a thread to follow.

HOW YOUR TYPE MOVES THROUGH STRESS AND EASE

The Enneagram is not a static map — it describes movement. Each type has two resource points on the diagram: a stress point and a security point. These are the Enneagram types your energy moves toward when you're under significant pressure or when you're feeling “in flow”, safe and supported.

This movement happens at an unconscious level. You don't decide to shift toward your stress point Enneagram type— it happens automatically, driven by the same survival instincts that shaped your core pattern in the first place. Under enough pressure, you may find yourself thinking, feeling, and behaving in ways that feel uncharacteristic — more anxious, more withdrawn, more reactive — without quite knowing why. That's movement towards the stress point Enneagram type.

The same is true in the other direction. When you feel secure, resourced, and at ease, your energy moves toward your security point Enneagram type, and you gain access to qualities that don't come as naturally from your “home base” type. You may find yourself more purposeful, more open, more willing to take up space — a version of yourself that feels both unfamiliar and right.

What makes this valuable is awareness. Once you recognize these movements — in yourself, in the moment — you are no longer simply subject to them. Becoming aware of your movement to the less resourced side of your stress point is a wake-up call to pause and take care of yourself. As you develop yourself, you can access the more useful qualities of both your stress and security points intentionally, rather than waiting for circumstances to push or pull you there. The stress point, which often shows up as a less resourced version of yourself under pressure, also contains real capacities worth cultivating. The security point is not a destination you only reach when everything is going well — its higher qualities are available to you right here, right now, as a valuable resource. Finally, if you notice yourself behaving like the lower side of your security point, that is a sign that you are very stressed indeed, and need to take a pause.

UNDER STRESS

Under significant stress, Sevens can move toward Type 1 territory — becoming more self-critical, exacting, and perfectionistic than usual. The tireless generosity can curdle into judgment: of yourself for not doing enough, of others for not meeting the standard, of the situation for not being what it should be. Recognizing this pattern early — noticing when the inner critic gets louder under pressure — is a key part of working with this type's growth edge.

WHEN AT EASE

When Sevens feel genuinely safe and supported, they can access Type 5's positive qualities — becoming more still, more focused, more capable of going deep rather than wide. This is one of the Seven's most important growth pathways: the discovery that slowing down, going inward, and sitting with one thing fully is not deprivation but a different kind of richness. Your response to the security question suggested you may already have some access to this — worth exploring what conditions make that stillness possible for you.

WING INFLUENCE

ABOUT WINGS

Wings are the two types adjacent to your core type on the Enneagram. They act as neighbors — not changing who you are, but flavoring how your core type shows up. Most people lean toward one wing more than the other, though some experience both equally and some don't notice much wing influence at all.

Your wing doesn't replace your core motivation; it adds texture, giving you access to qualities from an adjacent type that can both support and complicate your core pattern.

SIX WING — TYPE 6

A Seven with a strong Six wing is more loyal, more responsible, and more attentive to relationships. The Six wing brings warmth and a capacity for genuine commitment into the Seven's forward motion, producing people who are fun and reliable.

The tradeoff is more anxiety than a pure Seven, since the Six wing notices what could go wrong even as the Seven pushes toward what could go right. At their best, Sevens with a Six wing are enthusiastic and dependable — people who bring energy into groups while following through on what they promise.

EIGHT WING — TYPE 8

A Seven with a strong Eight wing is more assertive, more action-oriented, and more willing to push through resistance. The Eight wing brings directness and a tolerance for conflict into the Seven's playful energy, producing someone who is often entrepreneurial, bold, and capable of real decisiveness.

The tradeoff is a harder edge — the Eight wing can make a Seven less tolerant of others' slowness and more willing to override objections. At their best, Sevens with an Eight wing are energetic, commanding, and effective — people who get things moving and moving fast.

SECONDARY TYPE HYPOTHESIS

Type 2 — The Helper — emerged as a genuine alternative signal throughout this assessment, and it would be incomplete not to name it. The way others describe you — 'selfless,' 'always there' — is classic Two language. Your Habit of Mind answer also aligned more closely with Type 2's characteristic attention pattern: orienting toward others' needs, noticing what people want, attending to approval.

The structural data (how you responded to questions about stress and ease) pointed more clearly toward Type 7's architecture. But the overlap is real, and the distinction matters: at the core, Type 2's pattern is organized around the need to be loved and needed — withholding or withdrawing feels genuinely dangerous. Type 7's pattern is organized around keeping experience full and avoiding inner limitation — service and giving are the vehicle, but the underlying drive is about staying alive to possibility.

Only you can feel which of those descriptions lands closer to the bone.

WHAT TO EXPLORE WITH YOUR ENNEAGRAM COACH OR PRACTITIONER

These questions are designed to help you get the most out of your work with a coach or practitioner. Take a moment to sit with each one before your session.

1. The pattern we noticed points toward someone whose energy is organized around keeping things moving, positive, and meaningful — often by pouring that energy into others and into causes larger than yourself. As you think about your life right now, where do you notice that drive most strongly? And what would you most want to explore with your Enneagram coach or practitioner about how it's working for you — and where it might be costing you?
2. Think of a specific challenge you're facing right now — something that's genuinely difficult or unresolved. Notice how you tend to think about it, feel about it, and act toward it. Do you find yourself moving toward solutions and possibility? Toward what others need? Toward keeping things okay? Is that pattern helping you navigate this challenge, getting in the way, or both?
3. Some of the strengths associated with this pattern include the ability to inspire, a tireless generosity of spirit, and a gift for seeing possibility where others see limitation. Some of the challenges include difficulty slowing down, attending to your own needs, and sitting with pain or difficulty without reframing it. Which of those feels most alive for you right now — and which would you most want to bring into your conversation with your coach?
4. Here's an invitation to observe yourself this week: In moments of genuine difficulty — when something feels hard, disappointing, or draining — notice what happens inside. Do you find yourself moving quickly toward what you can do, contribute, or create next? Or do you notice a pull toward what others need from you, and a quiet worry about whether you're enough for them? Both are real patterns; one points more toward Type 7, the other more toward Type 2. What you notice in those unguarded moments is worth bringing to your session.
