

HIVE ENNEAGRAM REPORT PREPARED FOR TEST SP9

Type 9

The Peacemaker

ABOUT THE ENNEAGRAM

The Enneagram is a powerful tool for personal and professional development that describes nine distinct ways of being in the world, each anchored by a core motivation that shapes how we think, feel, and act. We have access to all nine types within us, and one of them is our home base — the pattern that has been most consistent throughout our lives.

You are not your type. Your type is a strategy you developed early on to get love, safety, and belonging, and with awareness, you can work with that pattern rather than be run by it.

You are the final authority on your Enneagram type. This report offers a hypothesis about what your type might be, based on how you answered the questions in the assessment. Type discovery is a journey, and working with a qualified coach, therapist, or other trained professional can help you get clearer on your type should you wish to go deeper.

A NOTE ON THIS RESULT

Based on your responses, the pattern that appears most consistent with your experience is Type 9 — The Peacemaker. We encourage you to hold this as a hypothesis or theory that you get to test 'in the wild'. That's the fun part. If it resonates, wonderful. If it doesn't fully fit, that's important information too. Debriefing this report with a trained Enneagram coach or practitioner like Cai or Monique is a great place to explore what fits, what doesn't, and why.

WHAT WE NOTICED ABOUT YOU

The words you used to describe yourself — 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady calming presence' — are some of the most quietly beautiful things a person can be, and they point toward a particular way of moving through the world that the Enneagram calls Type 9, the Peacemaker.

What's striking is how precisely you also named the cost of it: 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want.' That's not a small observation — that's the heart of what makes this pattern both a genuine gift and a genuine challenge. The same quality that makes you a grounding presence for others can, over time, make it harder to stay present to yourself.

Others see you as 'reliable, kind, sometimes stubborn, hard to read' — and that gap between how steady you appear on the outside and how much may be quietly unresolved on the inside is one of the most important things to bring into your sessions.

YOUR TYPE AT A GLANCE

HOW YOU SEE THE WORLD

Nines experience the world as a place that is more harmonious when they stay in the background and don't insist on their own needs, preferences, or perspective. They tend to merge with the priorities of others and with the rhythms of their environment, finding peace in accommodation and discomfort in conflict or separation.

CORE MOTIVATION

Nines are driven by a deep need to maintain inner and outer peace — to preserve a sense of union and connection by avoiding conflict, minimizing their own presence, and keeping the emotional temperature stable.

Underneath this drive is an early-formed belief that belonging requires blending in, that making yourself too visible or insistent risks disrupting the harmony that feels essential. In daily life, this shows up as an almost automatic attunement to what the environment needs, a tendency to merge with the agenda of the room, and a quiet instinct to smooth over rather than stir up.

The cost, over time, is self-forgetting — a gradual loss of contact with your own priorities, preferences, and voice, until it can feel genuinely hard to locate what you truly want.

In your responses: At the heart of the Type 9 pattern is a deep wish for inner and outer peace — and a tendency to maintain that peace by minimizing one's own needs, merging with others' agendas, and avoiding the kind of friction that comes from asserting what you actually want. Your description of your greatest strength — 'stability and presence — I keep things grounded' — is consistent with this. Nines often genuinely do offer something rare and settling to the people around them. But when you describe your most problematic quality as 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want,' you're pointing directly at what that peace costs: a gradual erasure of your own priorities and direction. The Type 9 pattern isn't about not having wants — it's about those wants becoming harder and harder to hear over time, often without you fully noticing it's happening.

PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

Your core motivation doesn't just live in the background — it expresses itself as recognizable patterns of thinking, feeling, and behaving that show up consistently across different areas of your life.

THINKING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Attention goes first to the overall atmosphere — who's comfortable, what the room needs, whether things feel settled. Nines often notice other people's positions and preferences before they notice their own, and they may find that when they try to locate their own view, it feels fuzzy or genuinely absent.

Decisions can feel hard because every option seems to have merit, and the mind keeps generating reasons to stay with all of them rather than commit to one. Over time, this can create a sense of being a little out of focus with yourself — aware of everything around you, and less sure of what's true for you.

FEELING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Underneath the calm exterior, Nines often carry anger they don't fully recognize as anger — it gets routed away because anger threatens the peace. What shows up instead is stubbornness, a quiet dig-in that says no without saying no, or a kind of low-grade irritation that surfaces and then disappears before you can name it.

Feelings in general can feel slightly muted, as if turned down a few notches — not absent, but not quite reachable in real time. When something genuinely matters to you, it often takes longer than it should for you to notice, and longer still for you to act on it.

BEHAVIOR PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Nines tend to accommodate — reading the room, adjusting to what others seem to need, going along rather than pushing back. Energy often tends toward inertia, especially when you are facing tasks that require initiating something new or advocating for yourself.

When pressure builds, the response is frequently to slow down, get quiet, or disappear into comfortable routines rather than confront the source of the pressure directly. The resistance that does show up is usually indirect — procrastination, quiet refusal, or a stubborn digging-in that can surprise even you with how immovable it becomes.

These patterns give rise to a distinctive set of strengths and challenges. The ones below are characteristic of Type 9 — you may recognize some more than others, and that recognition itself is useful information.

STRENGTHS

- + A natural ability to create calm and safety in environments and relationships
- + Genuine empathy and the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without judgment
- + A grounded, steady presence that others instinctively trust and find reassuring

CHALLENGES

- Self-forgetting — losing touch with your own priorities, desires, and voice in the process of accommodating others
- Inertia — difficulty initiating action, especially on your own behalf, leading to procrastination or passive drift
- Conflict avoidance — a tendency to go along or stay quiet rather than assert a position, even when your perspective matters deeply

DEVELOPMENT TIPS

These practices can help you leverage your strengths and address the patterns that can hold you back.

1. Claim your own agenda. Practice naming what you want — even in small, low-stakes moments. Your preferences matter, and saying them out loud is how you learn to trust them.
2. Notice when you say "yes" and actually mean "no." This gap is often where passive resistance builds up later. If the real answer is no, let it be no.

3. Get curious about your irritation. When frustration surfaces — even as a flicker — treat it as information, not a problem. It's usually pointing to something important to you that isn't getting attention.
4. Focus on the immediate next step rather than the whole arc. Nines often stall when the full picture feels overwhelming. One small action is almost always possible, and it's often enough.
5. Welcome a little discomfort. Growth for Nines often lives on the other side of the small disruption you'd rather avoid — the hard conversation, the firm "no," the change in routine. Discomfort isn't a sign something's wrong; it's often a sign you're showing up.

ABOUT THE INSTINCTS

Alongside your core type, you have a dominant instinct — one of three innate drives that shape where your survival energy goes first. The three instincts are Self-Preservation (SP), focused on safety, comfort, health, and the practical resources of daily life; One-to-One (SX), focused on deep, intense connection with specific people or experiences; and Social (SO), focused on belonging, group dynamics, and your place within a community.

All three instincts are present in everyone, but one instinct tends to run the show. Understanding your dominant instinct helps explain why two people of the same type can look quite different in practice — the instinct flavors how the core pattern shows up in your life.

YOUR INSTINCT — SELF-PRESERVATION

Self-Preservation Nines maintain peace through the comfort of familiar routines, favorite activities, and the quiet pleasures of a well-ordered personal life. They tend to be practical and grounded, with a real gift for creating the rhythms and infrastructure that make daily life feel manageable.

The shadow side is a pull toward narcotizing comfort — food, possessions, routines that become a way of tuning out rather than engaging. SP Nines often look more self-contained than other Nines, which can make the core pattern of self-forgetting harder to spot from the outside.

In your responses: Your dominant instinct is Self-Preservation, which shapes your Type 9 pattern in a specific way: the merging and self-forgetting that's characteristic of Nines tends to show up most strongly in relation to your own comfort, routines, and physical environment rather than primarily through people-pleasing or seeking connection. For SP Nines, the pull toward inertia often feels less like 'going along with others' and more like a deep gravitational pull toward familiar rhythms, known territory, and the safety of what doesn't require too much from you. Your emphasis on 'stability' and being 'grounded' is consistent with this — the SP Nine finds peace in steadiness, and can struggle most when that steadiness is disrupted or when momentum is required.

HOW YOUR TYPE MOVES THROUGH STRESS AND EASE

The Enneagram is not a static map — it describes movement. Each type has two resource points on the diagram: a stress point and a security point. These are the Enneagram types your energy moves toward when you're under significant pressure or when you're feeling “in flow”, safe and supported.

This movement happens at an unconscious level. You don't decide to shift toward your stress point Enneagram type— it happens automatically, driven by the same survival instincts that shaped your core pattern in the first place. Under enough pressure, you may find yourself thinking, feeling, and behaving in ways that feel uncharacteristic — more anxious, more withdrawn, more reactive — without quite knowing why. That's movement towards the stress point Enneagram type.

The same is true in the other direction. When you feel secure, resourced, and at ease, your energy moves toward your security point Enneagram type, and you gain access to qualities that don't come as naturally from your “home base” type. You may find yourself more purposeful, more open, more willing to take up space — a version of yourself that feels both unfamiliar and right.

What makes this valuable is awareness. Once you recognize these movements — in yourself, in the moment — you are no longer simply subject to them. Becoming aware of your movement to the less resourced side of your stress point is a wake-up call to pause and take care of yourself. As you develop yourself, you can access the more useful qualities of both your stress and security points intentionally, rather than waiting for circumstances to push or pull you there. The stress point, which often shows up as a less resourced version of yourself under pressure, also contains real capacities worth cultivating. The security point is not a destination you only reach when everything is going well — its higher qualities are available to you right here, right now, as a valuable resource. Finally, if you notice yourself behaving like the lower side of your security point, that is a sign that you are very stressed indeed, and need to take a pause.

UNDER STRESS

Under significant stress, Nines can move into Type 6 territory — and when you recognized that pattern, you described increased anxiety, worst-case thinking, and reaching for reassurance from others. This is worth knowing because it can feel unfamiliar: the same person who usually feels calm and go-with-the-flow can suddenly feel like they're bracing for something to go wrong.

Recognizing when you've moved into that anxious, reassurance-seeking space is actually a useful signal — it often means something real is being suppressed or avoided underneath the usual peace. Rather than treating the anxiety as a problem to get rid of, your Enneagram coach or practitioner can help you learn to ask what it's trying to tell you.

WHEN AT EASE

When Nines feel genuinely safe, supported, and connected, they can access Type 3's qualities — increased energy, a clearer sense of direction, and the satisfying feeling of actually moving toward something. You recognized this: greater productivity, accomplishment, and a felt sense of knowing where you're headed.

This is one of the most encouraging things about this pattern. The capacity for focus and forward motion is already there — it's not something to build from scratch. With the right support and conditions, your natural steadiness can become directed momentum rather than comfortable stillness.

WING INFLUENCE

ABOUT WINGS

Wings are the two types adjacent to your core type on the Enneagram. They act as neighbors — not changing who you are, but flavoring how your core type shows up. Most people lean toward one wing more than the other, though some experience both equally and some don't notice much wing influence at all.

Your wing doesn't replace your core motivation; it adds texture, giving you access to qualities from an adjacent type that can both support and complicate your core pattern.

EIGHT WING — TYPE 8

A Nine with a strong Eight wing carries more edge, more appetite, and more willingness to push back when pushed. The Eight wing brings access to anger as a useful signal rather than something to manage away, and it can give a Nine real presence and protective energy — especially on behalf of others or a cause.

The tradeoff is that when this wing is strong and the Nine hasn't done their work, irritation and stubborn force can arrive suddenly and disproportionately, then vanish back into calm accommodation. At their best, Nines with an Eight wing are grounded, unflappable, and quietly powerful — steady people who can hold their position without needing to dominate the room.

ONE WING — TYPE 1

A Nine with a stronger One wing carries more structure, more attention to doing things properly, and more internal discipline. The One wing brings a sense that things should be a certain way, and it can give a Nine genuine follow-through and conscientiousness where pure Nine energy might drift.

The tradeoff is a quiet perfectionism and self-criticism that can sharpen the Nine's self-forgetting — not just overlooking your own needs, but judging yourself for having them. At their best, Nines with a One wing are principled, dependable, and thoughtful contributors who bring care and craft to whatever they're part of.

WHAT TO EXPLORE WITH YOUR ENNEAGRAM COACH OR PRACTITIONER

These questions are designed to help you get the most out of your work with a coach or practitioner. Take a moment to sit with each one before your session.

1. The Type 9 pattern is organized around a deep wish for peace — inner and outer — and one of its costs is a gradual drift away from your own wants, priorities, and sense of direction. As you think about your life right now, where do you notice that drift most? And what feels most alive for you to explore with your Enneagram coach or practitioner around this?
2. Think of a specific challenge or opportunity you're currently navigating — something that has some real stakes for you. As you sit with it, notice: are you moving toward what you actually want, or are you organizing around keeping things smooth and undisturbed? Are those patterns helping, getting in the way, or both?
3. Two of the great strengths that often come with the Type 9 pattern are the capacity for genuine presence and the ability to hold steady when others are anxious. Two of its characteristic challenges are losing momentum and struggling to identify and assert your own wants. Which of these — a strength you'd like to bring more of, or a challenge you'd like to work with — feels most important to bring to your sessions, and what makes that one feel urgent right now?

Generated by the Hive Enneagram Type Hypothesizer · © Copyright 2026, Hive, Inc. All rights reserved.