SP Nine — The Self-Preservation Peacemaker

HIGH CONFIDENCE

This report is designed as a session prep tool — organized around the debrief conversation you'll have with your client, not around how the assessment engine arrived at its hypothesis. Read Section 1 for the quick read. Use Sections 2 through 5 as a companion during the debrief itself. Section 6 offers contingency guidance depending on how the conversation unfolds.

THE READ

This is a clean, high-confidence Type 9 profile — one of the clearest you're likely to see. The Stage 0 language is almost diagnostically precise: 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady calming presence' is the Nine's idealized self-image stated without ambiguity, and 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want' is the Nine's core shadow named with a level of self-awareness that will make this debrief land quickly. The others' description — 'reliable, kind, sometimes stubborn, hard to read' — adds useful texture, particularly 'hard to read,' which points toward the Nine's characteristic opacity and internal withdrawal. The SP instinct is confirmed at HIGH confidence, which means this client's self-forgetting is likely organized more around comfort, routine, and inertia than around social harmony. Every stage of the assessment converged on the same result, and all three Stage 4 elements confirmed cleanly.

GOING IN

- Confidence is HIGH across the board — all five stages converge on SP Nine without ambiguity. You can open with confidence, though the invitation to explore remains more useful than a declaration.

- The client has already done significant reflective work — the precision of their Stage 0 shadow language ('I forget what I actually want') suggests they will recognize the core pattern quickly. The coaching opportunity is not in getting them to see it, but in what to do with the recognition.
- Watch for the Nine's characteristic passive reception of a type debrief: they may nod, agree, and go warm — and then gently drift past the harder implications. The 'go-with-the-flow' quality will show up in the session itself. Name it warmly when it does.
- No counter-type, no redirect flags, no lookalike ambiguity — this is a straightforward debrief. The complexity to introduce is developmental, not typological.

2 • DEBRIEFING CORE MOTIVATION AND WORLDVIEW

How to present the heart of the type and connect it to their own words.

THE CORE PATTERN

- The Nine's worldview is organized around a wish for peace — with themselves, with others, and with the world — and a deep, often unconscious belief that asserting their own presence, needs, or disagreements will disturb that peace in ways that can't be repaired.
- The result is a characteristic pattern of self-erasure: the Nine gradually narrows their own agenda, merges with the priorities and moods of people around them, and loses contact with what they actually want. This isn't passivity — it's a sophisticated, often invisible strategy for maintaining safety.
- Nines often have genuine gifts: they are non-anxious, grounding, steady. These are real. The pattern involves those gifts becoming a way of avoiding the friction of their own selfhood — and, over time, a way of not knowing what that selfhood even contains.
- The SP Nine's version of this is particularly worth holding: the merger is as much with comfort and routine as with people. This client is organized around stability and groundedness — which can mean that disruption to their physical environment, rhythm, or sense of safety is where the self-forgetting is most activated.

WHAT THEIR RESPONSES SHOWED

- The client described themselves as 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady calming presence' — the idealized Nine self-image, stated with no hedging.
- Their greatest strength — 'stability and presence — I keep things grounded' — shows the Nine's genuine gift, but also the way that gift is organized around others' experience rather than their own.
- 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want' is the shadow named clearly and with real precision. This client has some awareness of the pattern — the coaching work is in deepening that from intellectual awareness into embodied recognition.
- Others' description includes 'hard to read' — a useful data point. Nines are often opaque not because they're secretive but because they genuinely lose access to their own interior. When others can't read them, it's often because the Nine can't read themselves.

COACHING NOTES

- Lead with the gift before the shadow — this client named their strength first ('stability, grounded'), and honoring that before introducing the cost of the pattern will create the safety the Nine needs to hear the harder material.
- When you introduce the self-forgetting pattern, watch for the Nine to receive it a bit too easily — 'yes, that's me' — and then move on. The work is to slow that recognition down: what does it feel like in the body when the momentum goes? What happens in the moment before the drift?
- The framing that tends to resonate for Nines is not 'you disappear' but 'you become so good at attending to everything else that you stop being able to hear yourself.' This is less shaming and more accurate to the Nine's experience.

Try asking: 'When you said you forget what you actually want — can you think of a recent moment when you noticed that happening? What was going on, and what did you do with it?'

3 • DEBRIEFING PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

What to expect and what to watch for as you walk through type patterns.

CENTERS OF INTELLIGENCE

Body Center		0 / 18
Heart Center		0 / 18
Head Center		0 / 18

LIKELY TO RESONATE EASILY

- A natural ability to create calm and safety in environments and relationships
- Genuine empathy and the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without judgment
- A grounded, steady presence that others instinctively trust and find reassuring

MAY TAKE MORE CAREFUL UNPACKING

- Self-forgetting — losing touch with your own priorities, desires, and voice in the process of accommodating others
- Inertia — difficulty initiating action, especially on your own behalf, leading to procrastination or passive drift
- Conflict avoidance — a tendency to go along or stay quiet rather than assert a position, even when your perspective matters deeply

MAY BE HARDEST TO SEE

- The Nine's anger is the most consistently outside awareness of any Body type. This client will likely not identify anger as a significant pattern — but 'sometimes stubborn' (from others) is almost certainly passive resistance, which is how Nine anger typically moves. When others can't get traction with this client, or when plans quietly fail to materialize, the Nine's anger is often underneath.

- The self-forgetting itself is paradoxically hard to see because it doesn't feel like loss — it feels like peace. The client described 'losing momentum' as a problem, but the Nine's nervous system often experiences the drift as relief. The insight that will land hardest is that the 'easygoing' feeling sometimes isn't ease — it's numbing.
- The gap between the client's inner life and their external presentation — 'hard to read' — deserves exploration. Nines often appear steady and available while simultaneously being quite unreachable internally. The client may not have full awareness of how much is held unexpressed.

HOW THE CLIENT APPEARS TO MOVE — THE THREE FRAMEWORK SIGNALS

These are cross-referenced patterns that showed up consistently in their responses. Each offers a different lens on the type — worth weaving in conversationally rather than introducing as categories.

SOCIAL STYLE — WITHDRAWING

- As a Withdrawn type, this client's primary move under pressure is inward — not toward others (Compliant) or toward assertion (Assertive), but toward a kind of internal disengagement. 'Hard to read' is a behavioral artifact of this: the client withdraws into inner stability while maintaining outer calm.
- Withdrawal for this Nine is likely subtle — it won't look like avoidance in the obvious sense. It will look like steadiness, or patience, or flexibility. The coaching work involves helping the client distinguish between genuine equanimity and strategic withdrawal from their own inner life.
- When this client goes quiet or 'goes along,' it's worth gently checking what's happening inside — the Withdrawn move often feels, from the inside, like nothing is happening, when actually quite a lot is being held in suspension.

Weave in: 'When things get tense or complicated around you, what do you notice yourself doing on the inside — even when you look calm on the outside?'

EMOTIONAL STYLE — POSITIVE OUTLOOK

- Positive Outlook types manage difficulty by reframing toward the good, minimizing the negative, or simply not allowing the full weight of a problem to land. For this Nine, this likely shows up as a genuine tendency to see the best in situations — and as a practiced capacity for not quite letting the harder feelings register.
- The client's self-description is almost entirely positive-valenced: 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady.' There's no complexity or tension in the self-image they offered — which is worth noticing as a potential indicator of the Positive Outlook filtering at work.
- The risk for Positive Outlook types in coaching is that they agree with insights before fully landing them — they prefer to hold everything lightly and move on. Watch for this: genuine recognition will have some weight to it. Agreement that comes too easily may be a form of spiritual bypassing.

Weave in: 'Is there something about your current situation that you've been keeping in the 'it'll be fine' category — something that might deserve more of your attention than it's getting?'

ATTACHMENT STYLE — ATTACHMENT

- Attachment types (3, 6, 9) are oriented toward the relational field — they organize their identity and sense of safety in relation to others and the world around them. For the Nine, this shows up as the tendency to define peace in terms of the relational environment: when others are okay, the Nine can be okay.
- The client's language — 'I keep things grounded' for others, being a 'calming presence' — reflects this attachment orientation: their own inner state is defined partly by their role in the field around them. The SP instinct modifies this somewhat, directing the attachment toward stability and comfort more than toward people specifically.
- The Attachment pattern also means this client may have difficulty accessing their own wants in isolation from the relational context. Asking 'what do you want, just for yourself, apart from anyone else's needs or reactions?' is often both clarifying and disorienting for Nines.

Weave in: 'When you imagine what you actually want — separate from what works for everyone else — what comes up? Is it easy or hard to access that?'

COACHING NOTES FOR THIS SECTION

- Pace this section carefully. The client has some cognitive access to their pattern, but the frameworks can become another way of staying in the head and avoiding the felt sense. Use the frameworks to orient the conversation, then bring it back to the body and the present moment.
- The Positive Outlook filter means this client will tend to receive each framework insight warmly and then smooth past it. Build in pauses and slow the session down — 'what's happening for you right now as you hear that?' is a more useful intervention than offering more content.
- The combination of Withdrawn social style and Positive Outlook creates a client who is very good at looking engaged while actually being quite far away. Presence in the room is worth tracking — genuine contact will feel different from pleasant cooperation.

Try asking: 'Where in your body do you notice the 'go-with-the-flow' feeling? And is there anywhere in your body right now that doesn't feel quite as easy as that description suggests?'

4 • DEBRIEFING INSTINCT AND SUBTYPE

Their particular flavor of Type 9, and why it matters.

INSTINCT RANKING

SP NINE — THE SELF-PRESERVATION PEACEMAKER — HOW THE INSTINCT SHAPES THE TYPE

- SP Nine is the counter-type's closest neighbor on the comfort spectrum — not quite a counter-type, but significantly more introverted and inward-focused than SO or SX Nine. The SP instinct directs the Nine's self-forgetting toward physical comfort, familiar routine, and the sedating pleasures of daily life: food, rest, known environments, predictable rhythms.
- This client's emphasis on 'stability' and 'grounded' is a hallmark SP Nine presentation — the peace they seek is as much tactile and environmental as relational. They may find it harder to access their inner life not because they're avoiding people, but because the comfort of routine is itself narcotizing.
- SP Nines often appear more self-sufficient and less obviously people-pleasing than SO Nines, which can make the Nine pattern harder to spot in them. They may not read as 'needy' or 'conflict-avoidant' in obvious ways — the merger is with their own comfort zone rather than with another person's agenda.
- The 'stubborn' descriptor from others is particularly diagnostic for SP Nine: when their routine or comfort is threatened, this Nine can become quietly, persistently resistant in ways that surprise people who assumed they were entirely flexible.

WHY THIS SUBTYPE CAN BE EASY TO MISS

- SP Nines can be misread as Type 5 (withdrawn, self-sufficient, private) or Type 1 (reliable, grounded, steady). The distinction is motivational: the Five withdraws to preserve resources and inner autonomy; the One is organized around correctness; the SP Nine is organized around comfort and the maintenance of an undisturbed interior peace.
- Because SP Nines are less visibly people-focused than SO Nines, the merger pattern can look like independence rather than self-forgetting. Watch for: the client knowing exactly what others need but struggling to name what they themselves want.
- The SP instinct also means this client's self-forgetting may be most active around time, energy, and physical resources — 'losing momentum' is a very SP Nine symptom. It's not social harmony they're maintaining; it's the comfort of not having to push against anything.

COACHING NOTES

- When introducing the SP subtype, lead with the positive framing — the gift of groundedness, stability, a non-anxious presence — before introducing the shadow of comfort-as-numbing.
- The probe that tends to open SP Nines most is around routine and what they notice when that routine is disrupted. Where the disruption lands in the body is often where the pattern is most accessible.
- The client may not immediately recognize 'merger with comfort' as their pattern — they may read it as 'I just know what I like.' Invite them to ask whether 'what I like' is sometimes also 'what doesn't require anything from me.'

Try asking: 'Think about a typical day — what parts of it feel essential to your sense of okayness? And what happens inside when those parts get disrupted or have to change?'

5 • DEBRIEFING WINGS, LINES, AND RESOURCES

What they have available, especially under pressure.

STRESS MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 6

- Under stress, Type 9 moves toward Type 6 territory — increased anxiety, scanning for what could go wrong, and seeking reassurance from trusted others. This client confirmed this movement cleanly, recognizing worst-case thinking and reaching for reassurance as their stress signature.
- For SP Nines specifically, the movement to Six under stress often involves a sudden loss of the comforting inertia — the routine fails to sedate, the familiar doesn't feel safe, and the Nine is left without their usual buffer. The anxiety that emerges can feel disorienting because it's so unlike their baseline.
- Coaching angle: the stress move to Six, while uncomfortable, is actually a useful signal that something real needs attention. The Nine who can notice 'I'm in Six space right now' has a moment of self-awareness that, if followed, can point directly to what they've been not-quite-seeing.

Try asking: 'When you notice yourself going to worst-case thinking or reaching for reassurance — what do you think you're actually worried about underneath that? Is there something you've been keeping in the background that might be asking for your attention?'

SECURITY MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 3

- In security, Type 9 moves toward Type 3 — increased energy, direction, and a sense of productive forward motion. The client confirmed this cleanly: feeling supported and safe activates the capacity for focus, accomplishment, and a felt sense of knowing where they're going.
- This is important to hold in the coaching relationship itself: the SP Nine moves toward their best work when they feel genuinely safe in the coaching container. The move to Three in security is not performance-seeking — it's the Nine finally having enough ground under them to move.
- Coaching angle: explore what conditions are present when the client feels that Three-quality energy. What's different? What's supported? Making those conditions more conscious and more intentional is a key growth path.

Try asking: 'Think of a time recently when you felt that sense of direction and momentum — like you actually knew where you were going and had energy for it. What was different about that situation? What was present that made it possible?'

WINGS — TYPE 8 AND TYPE 1

- Type 9's two wings are Type 8 (the Eight wing) and Type 1 (the One wing). For this client, the SP instinct and the 'stability, grounded' language suggest the One wing may be more accessible as a resource — bringing structure, follow-through, and a quiet sense of standards into the Nine's natural steadiness.
- The Eight wing brings directness, presence, and the capacity to take up space — qualities the SP Nine may not naturally access but which become available when they feel secure. Others seeing this client as 'sometimes stubborn' may be glimpsing the Eight wing under pressure.

- When exploring wings, let the client lead — ask which description resonates more as a resource they have available, rather than asserting which wing is active. Nines often have uneven wing access, with one wing much more visible than the other.
- A useful frame: wings are not a second type, but flavors of the Nine pattern. The One wing makes a more principled, orderly Nine; the Eight wing makes a more direct, occasionally forceful Nine. Both can be developmental resources.

Try asking: 'There are two different flavors of Type 9 — one that tends toward more structure, standards, and quiet follow-through, and one that tends toward more directness and occasional force when pushed. Do either of those feel more like a resource you have available to you?'

6 • IF THE CONVERSATION GOES SIDeways

What to do depending on how they receive the hypothesis.

IF THEY RESONATE STRONGLY

- When the client strongly recognizes the pattern — especially the self-forgetting — don't move on too quickly. Strong recognition in a Nine can be its own form of merging with the framework rather than actually landing in the felt experience of it. Slow down and ask what the recognition is touching.
- Move from recognition to commitment: 'Now that you see this pattern, what would it mean to take it seriously? What would have to change, or what would you have to risk, in order to actually reclaim your own momentum?'

Try asking: 'What does it feel like right now to recognize this pattern so clearly? Is there anything that feels uncomfortable or at stake in acknowledging it?'

IF THEY PUSH BACK OR DISAGREE

- Do not defend the hypothesis. If the client pushes back — particularly around not recognizing the self-forgetting or the conflict-avoidance — hold it lightly and invite them to name what doesn't fit.
- The most likely alternate type for this client is Type 2. Both share the Attachment orientation and both can present as warm, reliable, and others-focused. The key distinction is motivational: Twos are organizing around being needed and maintaining love; Nines are organizing around maintaining peace and avoiding disruption.
- If Type 1 comes up as a candidate — especially given others' description of 'reliable' and the 'stability' language — the key distinguishing question is whether the client's steadiness is driven by a felt sense of what is right and correct (One), or by a wish to avoid friction and maintain a comfortable, undisturbed equilibrium (Nine).
- Never introduce a competing type as a correction — offer it as 'here's what that type is organized around, does that feel closer?' and let the client locate themselves.

Most likely alternate type: Type 2 — The Helper

Key distinguishing question: The key question is whether the client's orientation toward others is driven primarily by a wish to be needed and to secure love through giving (Type 2), or by a wish to keep the peace and avoid the friction that comes with asserting their own presence and needs (Type 9).

IF THEY'RE CONFUSED OR NEED MORE CLARITY

- If the client is genuinely confused — not resistant, but unable to locate the pattern — find the foothold in their own words: 'You said you forget what you actually want. Can you say more about that? When does that happen most?'
- Treat what doesn't fit as equally useful data: 'Tell me what doesn't fit, because that's often where the most interesting information lives.' A Nine who says 'I don't think I avoid conflict' may actually be describing the Nine's way of avoiding conflict, which often doesn't look like avoidance from the inside.

Try asking: 'Is there a part of you that knows what you want — but it's somehow harder to hold onto than it should be? What happens to it?'
