

HIVE ENNEAGRAM REPORT PREPARED FOR TEST SO7

Type 7

The Enthusiast

ABOUT THE ENNEAGRAM

The Enneagram is a powerful tool for personal and professional development that describes nine distinct ways of being in the world, each anchored by a core motivation that shapes how we think, feel, and act. We have access to all nine types within us, and one of them is our home base — the pattern that has been most consistent throughout our lives.

You are not your type. Your type is a strategy you developed early on to get love, safety, and belonging, and with awareness, you can work with that pattern rather than be run by it.

You are the final authority on your Enneagram type. This report offers a hypothesis about what your type might be, based on how you answered the questions in the assessment. Type discovery is a journey, and working with a qualified coach, therapist, or other trained professional can help you get clearer on your type should you wish to go deeper.

A NOTE ON THIS RESULT

Based on your responses, the pattern that appears most consistent with your experience is Type 7 — The Enthusiast. We encourage you to hold this as a hypothesis or theory that you get to test 'in the wild'. That's the fun part. If it resonates, wonderful. If it doesn't fully fit, that's important information too. Debriefing this report with a trained Enneagram coach or practitioner like Cai or Monique is a great place to explore what fits, what doesn't, and why.

WHAT WE NOTICED ABOUT YOU

The words you chose to describe yourself — 'warm, generous, devoted to the people and causes I care about, tireless' — point toward someone whose energy is fundamentally outward-facing, oriented toward vision, inspiration, and showing up fully for what matters. Others see you as 'selfless' and 'visionary,' which suggests that your enthusiasm and commitment aren't primarily about your own experience — they're channeled toward something larger.

What stands out is the quality of that devotion. Where many people might describe themselves in terms of what they achieve or how they think, you lead with relationship and cause. The shadow you named — burnout — is a meaningful piece of data: it points toward a pattern of giving so completely that the self can quietly disappear in the service of the mission.

The patterns in your responses are most consistent with a Type 7 — The Enthusiast — but in a specific and less commonly recognized form: the Social Seven, sometimes called the 'Sacrifice' subtype. This is a Seven whose natural exuberance and forward-motion energy has been redirected outward, away from personal pleasure and toward inspiring and uplifting others. If the standard Type 7 description (spontaneous, pleasure-seeking, variety-loving) doesn't fully land for you, that's worth naming — this particular expression of Seven looks quite different on the surface.

There is also a genuine Type 2 signal in your responses, and we want to be honest about that rather than paper over it. The question worth exploring with your Enneagram coach or practitioner is this: when you give so generously and show up so completely for others, what is the deeper driver? Is it the joy of being part of something meaningful — and a way of keeping pain, limitation, or boredom at bay? Or is it a need to be needed, to belong through giving? Both are real possibilities, and both deserve honest exploration.

YOUR TYPE AT A GLANCE

HOW YOU SEE THE WORLD

Sevens experience the world as a place full of fascinating possibilities — where limits, pain, and boredom are obstacles to be navigated around, and where the best strategy is to keep options open, keep moving, and keep the future bright. They tend to focus on what's next, what's interesting, and what could make this moment better.

CORE MOTIVATION

Sevens are driven by a deep need to experience life fully, stay free of painful limitation, and maintain the sense that something good is always ahead.

Underneath this drive is an early-formed belief that pain and constraint must be managed by staying several steps ahead — through planning, reframing, and keeping the future richer than the present. In daily life, this shows up as quick thinking, genuine enthusiasm, a talent for connecting ideas and people, and an almost reflexive pivot away from anything that feels heavy or stuck.

The cost, over time, is a kind of scattered aliveness — many experiences started, fewer fully tasted, and a quiet difficulty staying with what's actually here when it isn't what you'd hoped for.

In your responses: Type 7's core motivation is the pursuit of what is stimulating, meaningful, and full of possibility — and, underneath that, an avoidance of pain, limitation, and anything that feels like being trapped or cut off from what life could be. In the Social Seven counter-type, this drive doesn't look like personal pleasure-seeking; it looks like 'tireless' devotion to causes and people, and an ability to 'inspire people toward something bigger than themselves.' The word 'tireless' is particularly resonant here — it suggests someone who keeps moving, keeps contributing, keeps the energy alive. The burnout you named as your most problematic quality aligns with what happens when a Seven's forward-motion strategy is applied to service: the movement never stops, but the cost accumulates quietly. 'Devoted to the causes I care about' also points toward Seven's characteristic relationship with meaning — Sevens are not directionless pleasure-seekers; they are often deeply committed to what feels alive and significant to them. The Social Seven redirects that aliveness entirely toward others, which is what makes this subtype so easy to misread.

PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

Your core motivation doesn't just live in the background — it expresses itself as recognizable patterns of thinking, feeling, and behaving that show up consistently across different areas of your life.

THINKING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 7 — THE ENTHUSIAST

Attention goes first to what's possible, what's next, and what could make this moment more interesting. The mind moves quickly, connecting ideas across domains, generating options, planning pleasurable futures, and reframing anything that threatens to feel stuck.

You tend to hold many things open simultaneously — projects, plans, possibilities — because closing off options feels like losing freedom. Over time, this can produce brilliant synthesis alongside a scattered quality that makes depth and completion genuinely hard.

FEELING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 7 — THE ENTHUSIAST

Underneath the upbeat surface, fear runs the system — specifically, fear of being trapped, limited, or forced to stay with pain. Feelings that slow you down or feel heavy tend to get reframed, redirected, or distracted from quickly, often before you've fully noticed them.

Grief, sadness, fear, and limitation are the hardest to stay with, so they often accumulate in the background without being fully processed. The work is learning that feelings you've stayed with, including the hard ones, are what actually produce the full, rich experience of life you're reaching for.

BEHAVIOR PATTERNS OF A TYPE 7 — THE ENTHUSIAST

Sevens tend to be active, social, and forward-moving. Behavior often involves multiple projects, frequent plans, new experiences, and a generous enthusiasm that draws others in.

You move quickly, adapt easily, and often find yourself a few steps ahead of others. The shadow is over-commitment, avoidance of the difficult, and relationships or projects that suffer when the novelty wears off and the work of staying begins.

These patterns give rise to a distinctive set of strengths and challenges. The ones below are characteristic of Type 7 — you may recognize some more than others, and that recognition itself is useful information.

STRENGTHS

- + Genuine optimism and the ability to see possibility where others see obstacles
- + Quick thinking, versatility, and a gift for synthesizing ideas across domains
- + Real warmth and enthusiasm that energizes groups and relationships

CHALLENGES

- Scattered attention — too many open loops, too many half-started projects, too many possibilities
- Avoidance of pain, limitation, and commitment that would require you to stay when things get hard
- A tendency to reframe difficulty toward the positive so quickly that real feelings don't get processed

DEVELOPMENT TIPS

These practices can help you leverage your strengths and address the patterns that can hold you back.

1. Over-scheduling and future-focus are often signals that something in the present is being avoided. Ask yourself what you'd be feeling if you slowed down.
2. Work on one thing at a time, and practice finishing what you start. Depth of experience requires staying past the point where your attention wants to jump to the next thing.
3. When pain, fear, or limitation arrives, practice staying with it a little longer before reframing it. The full experience of a difficult feeling is often what lets it actually move through.
4. Notice the difference between excitement about possibility and genuine aliveness in the present. Both are real, but they serve different purposes.
5. Commit to something. Commitment closes doors, and for Sevens that can feel unbearable — but it's also where depth, love, and meaning actually live.

ABOUT THE INSTINCTS

Alongside your core type, you have a dominant instinct — one of three innate drives that shape where your survival energy goes first. The three instincts are Self-Preservation (SP), focused on safety, comfort, health, and the practical resources of daily life; One-to-One (SX), focused on deep, intense connection with specific people or experiences; and Social (SO), focused on belonging, group dynamics, and your place within a community.

All three instincts are present in everyone, but one instinct tends to run the show. Understanding your dominant instinct helps explain why two people of the same type can look quite different in practice — the instinct flavors how the core pattern shows up in your life.

YOUR INSTINCT — SOCIAL

Social Sevens are the counter-type — rather than indulging their appetite, they sacrifice personal desires in service of the group or a social ideal. There's a paradox here: to belong, they accept limits they'd otherwise resist.

This subtype channels expansive energy into visions for a better world, group projects, and causes. The shadow is over-extension from too many plans and a tendency to confuse social idealism with arriving at the good life they imagine.

In your responses: Your Social instinct appears to be the dominant driver shaping how this pattern expresses itself. Where another Seven might focus their energy on personal experiences and variety, your energy moves toward the group — toward vision, shared purpose, and showing up for the people and causes you care about. 'Inspire people toward something bigger than themselves' is a Social instinct expression in its clearest form: the focus is on collective uplift rather than personal gain. This same instinct may be part of what makes the burnout pattern so significant — when the Social instinct is the primary lens, rest and personal replenishment can feel selfish or beside the point, even when they're essential.

HOW YOUR TYPE MOVES THROUGH STRESS AND EASE

The Enneagram is not a static map — it describes movement. Each type has two resource points on the diagram: a stress point and a security point. These are the Enneagram types your energy moves toward when you're under significant pressure or when you're feeling “in flow”, safe and supported.

This movement happens at an unconscious level. You don't decide to shift toward your stress point Enneagram type— it happens automatically, driven by the same survival instincts that shaped your core pattern in the first place. Under enough pressure, you may find yourself thinking, feeling, and behaving in ways that feel uncharacteristic — more anxious, more withdrawn, more reactive — without quite knowing why. That's movement towards the stress point Enneagram type.

The same is true in the other direction. When you feel secure, resourced, and at ease, your energy moves toward your security point Enneagram type, and you gain access to qualities that don't come as naturally from your “home base” type. You may find yourself more purposeful, more open, more willing to take up space — a version of yourself that feels both unfamiliar and right.

What makes this valuable is awareness. Once you recognize these movements — in yourself, in the moment — you are no longer simply subject to them. Becoming aware of your movement to the less resourced side of your stress point is a wake-up call to pause and take care of yourself. As you develop yourself, you can access the more useful qualities of both your stress and security points intentionally, rather than waiting for circumstances to push or pull you there. The stress point, which often shows up as a less resourced version of yourself under pressure, also contains real capacities worth cultivating. The security point is not a destination you only reach when everything is going well — its higher qualities are available to you right here, right now, as a valuable resource. Finally, if you notice yourself behaving like the lower side of your security point, that is a sign that you are very stressed indeed, and need to take a pause.

UNDER STRESS

Under significant stress, Sevens can move toward Type 1 territory — becoming more critical, self-judging, and perfectionistic than usual. The drive to keep things positive and forward-moving can suddenly invert into harsh internal criticism or rigid standards, often catching both the Seven and those around them off guard. Recognizing this shift — 'I'm becoming critical and controlling rather than inspired and generative' — can be an early signal that something needs to change before burnout deepens.

WHEN AT EASE

When Sevens feel genuinely safe and supported, they can access Type 5's positive qualities: the ability to be still, to go deep, to focus without needing to keep moving. For a Seven whose default is tireless forward motion, this is actually a profound resource — the capacity to slow down, to be present with what is rather than what could be, and to find that depth is not a trap but a different kind of aliveness. Noticing when you can access that stillness is worth paying attention to.

WING INFLUENCE

ABOUT WINGS

Wings are the two types adjacent to your core type on the Enneagram. They act as neighbors — not changing who you are, but flavoring how your core type shows up. Most people lean toward one wing more than the other, though some experience both equally and some don't notice much wing influence at all.

Your wing doesn't replace your core motivation; it adds texture, giving you access to qualities from an adjacent type that can both support and complicate your core pattern.

SIX WING — TYPE 6

A Seven with a strong Six wing is more loyal, more responsible, and more attentive to relationships. The Six wing brings warmth and a capacity for genuine commitment into the Seven's forward motion, producing people who are fun and reliable.

The tradeoff is more anxiety than a pure Seven, since the Six wing notices what could go wrong even as the Seven pushes toward what could go right. At their best, Sevens with a Six wing are enthusiastic and dependable — people who bring energy into groups while following through on what they promise.

EIGHT WING — TYPE 8

A Seven with a strong Eight wing is more assertive, more action-oriented, and more willing to push through resistance. The Eight wing brings directness and a tolerance for conflict into the Seven's playful energy, producing someone who is often entrepreneurial, bold, and capable of real decisiveness.

The tradeoff is a harder edge — the Eight wing can make a Seven less tolerant of others' slowness and more willing to override objections. At their best, Sevens with an Eight wing are energetic, commanding, and effective — people who get things moving and moving fast.

SECONDARY TYPE HYPOTHESIS

Type 2 — The Giver — carries a meaningful alternative signal in your responses and is worth holding alongside the Type 7 hypothesis rather than setting aside entirely. Twos are driven by a deep need to be loved and needed, and they give generously — often at cost to themselves — as a way of securing connection and belonging. The description 'selfless, always there — sometimes to a fault' is consistent with both the Social Seven counter-type and with Type 2.

The place to look for the distinction is in the interior experience of giving. For a Seven, the devotion and service tend to come with a sense of aliveness, vision, and being part of something meaningful — the giving is energizing even when it's exhausting. For a Two, the giving is more deeply tied to whether others need you, appreciate you, and would stay if you stopped giving.

Your Enneagram coach or practitioner will likely want to explore this distinction with you directly, because it lives in a layer of experience that an assessment can point toward but not definitively resolve.

WHAT TO EXPLORE WITH YOUR ENNEAGRAM COACH OR PRACTITIONER

These questions are designed to help you get the most out of your work with a coach or practitioner. Take a moment to sit with each one before your session.

1. At the heart of the Type 7 pattern is a deep orientation toward possibility, aliveness, and meaning — and a tendency to keep moving in ways that can make it hard to sit with limitation, pain, or the feeling that something is closing down. As you think about your life right now, where do you notice that drive most clearly? And what would you most like to explore with your Enneagram coach or practitioner about how it shapes your choices?
2. Think of a specific challenge you're navigating right now — something that has real stakes for you. As you picture yourself in that situation, notice: how do you think about it, how do you feel about it, and what do you find yourself doing? Is the pattern you notice there helping you move through it, getting in the way, or both? Bring that specific situation to your session.
3. Some of the key strengths that tend to go with this pattern include vision, enthusiasm, generosity, the ability to inspire others, and tireless commitment to what matters. Some of the key challenges include difficulty with stillness, a tendency to keep giving past the point of sustainability, and avoidance of pain or limitation. Which of these would you most like to bring more of — or work on — and what makes that one feel most alive or most urgent for you right now?
4. Something worth observing this week: there are two patterns that both showed up meaningfully in your responses, and they can look similar from the outside. One is driven by a need to be part of something alive and meaningful, to keep options and energy open, and to avoid feeling limited or trapped — and the generosity flows from that aliveness. The other is driven by a need to be needed and loved, and the generosity is a way of securing that connection. This week, in moments when you find yourself giving generously or showing up for others, see if you can gently notice: what's underneath that impulse? Which description feels closer to the truth in those moments?

Generated by the Hive Enneagram Type Hypothesizer · © Copyright 2026, Hive, Inc. All rights reserved.