

Type 9 • SP

SP Nine — The Self-Preservation Peacemaker

HIGH CONFIDENCE

This report is designed as a session prep tool — organized around the debrief conversation you'll have with your client, not around how the assessment engine arrived at its hypothesis. Read Section 1 for the quick read. Use Sections 2 through 5 as a companion during the debrief itself. Section 6 offers contingency guidance depending on how the conversation unfolds.

1 • YOUR READ ON THIS CLIENT

PRIMARY HYPOTHESISType 9 — The Peacemaker*DOMINANT INSTINCT*Self-Preservation (SP)*CONFIDENCE*HIGH*ALTERNATE TO HOLD LIGHTLY*Type 2 — The Giver*COUNTER-TYPE*Not flagged

THE READ

This is a clean, high-confidence Type 9 presentation — one of the clearer ones the system will produce. The client's Stage 0 language is almost definitionally Nine: 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady calming presence' as self-description, and 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want' as the shadow. That second phrase in particular is worth marking — it's not vague self-awareness, it's an unusually precise articulation of the Nine's core dilemma, and it suggests someone who has spent time with this experience even if they haven't named it yet.

The 'hard to read' descriptor from others is diagnostically interesting. Nines are often experienced as warm and present by others, but the inner world stays largely invisible — which is precisely what makes them hard to read. 'Sometimes stubborn' is the passive resistance showing up in others' perception before the client has named it in themselves. The SP instinct adds a layer of routine-orientation and settledness that will shape how this client's

Nine pattern presents: less socially merged, more domestically anchored. All stages — Center, cross-referencing, pairwise discrimination, and architecture — aligned without contradiction.

GOING IN

- Confidence is HIGH across all dimensions — Center (Body, gap 5), Instinct (SP, gap 4), cross-referencing (all three frameworks converge on Type 9), Stage 3 (Type 9 over Type 2 cleanly), and Stage 4 (all three architecture points confirmed). You can open the debrief with genuine confidence in this hypothesis.
- The client is likely to recognize the idealized self-description immediately — 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow' will feel true and probably flattering. The more interesting recognition moment will come when you introduce self-forgetting and priority dissolution. 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want' came from them — use their own words back.
- Potential resistance point: 'stubborn' from others may feel inconsistent with how the client sees themselves. This is worth naming — Nine stubbornness is typically passive and positional rather than active and declarative. It's the immovability that comes from not moving, not from fighting. Frame it gently.
- The SP instinct may make this Nine appear more self-contained and less obviously merger-oriented than the classic Nine description. Watch for the client describing their peace-maintenance strategies in terms of environment, routine, and comfort rather than interpersonal harmony — both are Nine, but they feel different from the inside.
- No counter-type, no redirect, no flags. This is a straightforward debrief — your primary work will be depth of exploration, not disambiguation.

2 • DEBRIEFING CORE MOTIVATION AND WORLDVIEW

How to present the heart of the type and connect it to their own words.

THE CORE PATTERN

- The Nine's core belief is that their presence, wants, and distinctness are disruptive — that love and belonging require keeping themselves small, harmonious, and non-threatening. The strategy is self-erasure in service of connection.
- Attention for a Nine moves outward and diffuses: toward others' agendas, toward what will keep things smooth, toward what is comfortable and familiar — and away from their own inner experience, wants, and direction. The self doesn't disappear; it just becomes very quiet.
- The core avoidance is conflict and separation — not just interpersonal conflict, but the internal conflict of having a strong, distinct self that might disrupt the peace. Asserting a want is itself a kind of risk.
- The Nine's gift — genuine presence, patience, the ability to hold multiple perspectives without collapsing — is real and not merely compensatory. But it comes at the cost of the self that gets set aside to maintain it.

WHAT THEIR RESPONSES SHOWED

- 'Peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady calming presence' — this is the Nine idealization articulated with unusual clarity. The client has built an identity around being the person who doesn't disrupt.

- 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want' — this is the shadow named from the inside. This phrase is the core Nine dilemma in a sentence, and it came unprompted. It suggests real self-awareness about the pattern, even if the structural cause hasn't yet been named.
- 'Hard to read' from others — consistent with the Nine's invisible inner world. Others feel the warmth and presence but can't locate the person underneath.
- 'Sometimes stubborn' from others — the passive resistance showing up in others' perception. This is worth surfacing carefully: it's often news to a Nine that their immovability is experienced as stubbornness.

COACHING NOTES

- Start with the idealized self-description — let them affirm it. The gifts of the Nine pattern are real and should be honored before you introduce the shadow.
- When you introduce self-forgetting, use their own words: 'You said you lose your own momentum and forget what you actually want — that phrase stood out. Can we stay with that for a moment?' This avoids the feeling of being labeled and keeps the client in their own experience.
- Watch for the Nine's tendency to intellectualize or narrate from a distance rather than staying in felt experience. Gently invite them back into the body and the present moment when you notice this — the body probe in Section 3 is useful here.

Try asking: 'When you said you forget what you actually want — what does that feel like in the moment it's happening? Is there a particular situation where you notice it most clearly?'

3 • DEBRIEFING PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

What to expect and what to watch for as you walk through type patterns.

CENTERS OF INTELLIGENCE

Body Center		0 / 18
Heart Center		0 / 18
Head Center		0 / 18

LIKELY TO RESONATE EASILY

- A natural ability to create calm and safety in environments and relationships
- Genuine empathy and the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without judgment
- A grounded, steady presence that others instinctively trust and find reassuring

MAY TAKE MORE CAREFUL UNPACKING

- Self-forgetting — losing touch with your own priorities, desires, and voice in the process of accommodating others

- Inertia — difficulty initiating action, especially on your own behalf, leading to procrastination or passive drift
- Conflict avoidance — a tendency to go along or stay quiet rather than assert a position, even when your perspective matters deeply

MAY BE HARDEST TO SEE

- The Nine's self-forgetting is so habitual it often doesn't register as a pattern — it simply feels like being easy to get along with, flexible, or accommodating. The client may not have a felt sense of what they're setting aside because the habit of deferral is ego-syntonic.
- 'Hard to read' from others is a window into how invisible the inner world has become — not just to others, but potentially to the client themselves. The question of what they actually want may feel genuinely difficult to answer, not because they're withholding but because the attention doesn't naturally go there.
- The passive stubbornness described by others is the shadow of the self-erasure strategy: when the Nine can't say yes and can't say no, they simply don't move. This immovability is often outside the client's self-awareness — they experience themselves as easygoing, not as resistant.

HOW THE CLIENT APPEARS TO MOVE — THE THREE FRAMEWORK SIGNALS

These are cross-referenced patterns that showed up consistently in their responses. Each offers a different lens on the type — worth weaving in conversationally rather than introducing as categories.

SOCIAL STYLE — WITHDRAWING

- As a Withdrawing type, this client manages their energy by pulling inward and away from direct engagement with conflict, demand, or assertion. Their peace isn't passive — it's actively maintained by staying out of the arena.
- The 'go-with-the-flow' and 'hard to read' descriptors are consistent with someone who withdraws from the surface of things: they're present, but the full self is not forward.
- Withdrawal in a Nine is often invisible — it doesn't look like the Five's explicit pulling back or the Four's dramatic retreat. It looks like agreeableness and accommodation, which makes it harder to name and easier to miss.

Weave in: 'When something in a relationship or situation feels off — like there's tension brewing — what do you usually do first? What's the impulse?'

EMOTIONAL STYLE — POSITIVE OUTLOOK

- As a Positive Outlook type, this client tends to reframe difficulty, minimize problems, and maintain a forward-looking or comfortable frame — not as denial, but as a deep preference for keeping the peace and avoiding the discomfort of sitting with what's hard.
- The emphasis on 'stability,' 'steady,' and 'calming' in their self-description is consistent with someone who filters experience through a lens of okayness — everything tends toward being fine, which makes it hard to locate what isn't.

- The Positive Outlook pattern can make it difficult for the client to access and articulate distress, conflict, or strong negative emotion — not because they don't have it, but because the filter is so practiced. The stress recognition (anxiety, worst-case thinking) suggests these experiences do exist, but they may feel foreign or alarming when they break through.

Weave in: 'You described yourself as a calming presence for others — when something is genuinely hard for you, what do you usually do with that? Where does it go?'

ATTACHMENT STYLE — ATTACHMENT

- As an Attachment type, this client's core strategy is organized around staying connected — but unlike the Six (who attaches to systems and authorities) or the Three (who attaches to performance), the Nine attaches through merging: becoming what the relationship or environment needs.
- The 'reliable, kind' descriptors from others, combined with the 'hard to read' note, are consistent with someone who is experienced as a steady presence but whose full self remains somewhat opaque — the attachment is real, but it's maintained partly by not being too much.
- The self-forgetting pattern ('I forget what I actually want') is the direct cost of the Attachment strategy: what gets lost in the merging is the Nine's own agenda, direction, and desire.

Weave in: 'In your closest relationships, how much do you feel like the real you is known? Like — not the easy, go-with-the-flow version, but the part of you that has strong opinions or real wants?'

COACHING NOTES FOR THIS SECTION

- Pace this section carefully. Nines can receive the frameworks intellectually without landing in the felt experience of them. The goal is not understanding — it's recognition. Watch for the nod that means 'yes, that makes sense' versus the pause that means 'oh, that's me.'
- When the client moves into narrating or explaining, gently redirect to the body and the present: 'What's happening right now as you hear that?' The frameworks are most useful when they produce a moment of felt recognition, not a cognitive map.
- The 'hard to read' descriptor from others is a particularly useful entry point — ask them what they make of it. The gap between how they see themselves (warm, present, easy) and how others experience them (opaque) is often productive territory.

Try asking: 'Where do you actually feel that — the losing momentum, the forgetting what you want — in your body? Is there a sensation or a place?'

4 • DEBRIEFING INSTINCT AND SUBTYPE

Their particular flavor of Type 9, and why it matters.

INSTINCT RANKING

SP NINE — THE SELF-PRESERVATION PEACEMAKER — HOW THE INSTINCT SHAPES THE TYPE

- The SP Nine's peace-maintenance strategy is built around the physical and domestic world: routine, comfort, familiar environments, and reliable patterns that keep the nervous system settled. The merger tendency of the Nine shows up less in social blending and more in attachment to the physical structures of daily life.
- This client's emphasis on 'stability' and 'keeping things grounded' is consistent with an SP Nine who anchors their sense of self and safety in the predictability and comfort of their immediate environment. The risk-aversion isn't primarily social — it's structural.
- SP Nines can appear more self-contained and autonomous than the standard Nine description suggests. They may not obviously defer to others in social settings — the merging is quieter, more internal. But the self-forgetting still happens; it's just less visible.
- The 'losing momentum' and 'forgetting what I actually want' is particularly poignant in an SP Nine context: the very routines and comfort structures that feel stabilizing can become the mechanism through which the Nine stays comfortable and unmoving rather than awake and directed.

WHY THIS SUBTYPE CAN BE EASY TO MISS

- SP Nines are easy to misread as highly functional, self-sufficient people who simply prefer stability — the Nine pattern may not be obvious because the comfort-seeking and routine-orientation can look like healthy self-care or introversion rather than self-forgetting.
- Because the SP instinct focuses inward and on the personal environment rather than on social harmony, this client may not resonate immediately with descriptions of Nine as people-pleasing or socially merged. Be prepared to translate: 'It might look less like going along with people and more like going along with the familiar — staying in the comfortable groove rather than asserting a new direction.'
- The typical misread for SP Nine is Type 5 (self-sufficient, inward, routine-oriented) or occasionally Type 1 (disciplined, steady, reliable). The distinguishing question is always motivation: the Five conserves energy because the world is depleting; the One maintains standards because correctness matters; the Nine stays comfortable because disruption threatens peace.

COACHING NOTES

- When introducing the SP instinct, anchor it in the physical and domestic world rather than leading with the social merger framing. Ask about routines, comfort, what 'a good day' looks and feels like for them — this is where the SP Nine's experience lives.
- If the client seems surprised by the Nine typing because they don't experience themselves as particularly other-oriented, the SP framing will help: 'The Nine pattern for you may show up less in following others' lead and more in following what's familiar and comfortable — even when a part of you is ready for something different.'

- The access point for growth work with SP Nine is usually momentum and direction — not conflict resolution or people-pleasing (which is more SO Nine territory). Help the client locate what they actually want and what small action would move toward it.

Try asking: 'Tell me about a typical week for you — what does a day feel like when it's going well? What are the things you make sure are in place?'

5 • DEBRIEFING WINGS, LINES, AND RESOURCES

What they have available, especially under pressure.

STRESS MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 6

- Under stress, the client confirmed a move into Type 6 territory: anxiety, worst-case thinking, and seeking reassurance from others. For a Nine, this is a significant departure from their characteristic groundedness — and it can be alarming precisely because it feels so foreign to their normal mode.
- The stress move to Six often looks like the Nine's equanimity suddenly failing — they become worried, clingy, and scanning for threat. Partners and colleagues may be confused by the shift. The client themselves may not connect it to stress, because the Nine's stress can build slowly and silently before breaking through.
- Coaching angle: help the client develop early warning signals for the stress move — what are the first signs, before the anxiety fully arrives? And what practices bring them back to their characteristic groundedness?

Try asking: 'You recognized the anxiety and worst-case thinking when I described it — can you think of a recent time when you shifted into that mode? What was happening just before it started?'

SECURITY MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 3

- In security, the client confirmed a move into Type 3 territory: increased energy, productivity, and a greater sense of direction and accomplishment. This is a meaningful and hopeful finding — it tells you what growth looks like for this client, and it tells you they have direct access to it under the right conditions.
- The security move to Three is the Nine beginning to act as if their own direction and accomplishment matter — which is, in a real sense, the Nine coming alive. It's worth studying carefully: what conditions produce this? What was present when they felt that energy?
- Coaching angle: rather than framing growth as 'overcoming self-forgetting,' frame it as 'creating more of the conditions where that Three energy naturally shows up.' The goal isn't to become a Three — it's to access what the Nine already has access to in the right environment.

Try asking: 'You recognized that feeling — the energy and direction and sense of accomplishment. When do you feel that most? What's usually true about those moments?'

WINGS — TYPE 8 AND TYPE 1

- Type 9 has wings at Type 8 and Type 1. The Eight wing brings more assertiveness, directness, and willingness to engage — Nine with Eight wing can surprise people with moments of unexpected force or decisiveness. The One wing brings more structure, principle, and a sense of responsibility — Nine with One wing tends to be more ordered, conscientious, and quietly principled.
- For SP Nines specifically, the One wing is worth exploring — the combination of SP Nine's routine-orientation and the One wing's structured approach can look quite tidy and functional from the outside, while the self-forgetting and loss of momentum are happening underneath.
- Let the client lead the wings exploration — ask what resonates from each description rather than assigning a dominant wing. The wings often reveal developmental edges: the Eight wing as a resource for assertiveness and self-expression; the One wing as a resource for discernment and principle.
- Watch for the client identifying strongly with the One wing as a way of avoiding the Nine shadow — 'I do have high standards' can be a way of not engaging with 'I forget what I actually want.' Both can be true; the question is which serves the work right now.

Try asking: 'When you think about the Eight wing — more assertive, direct, willing to push back — and the One wing — more principled, structured, conscientious — which feels more like a resource for you? Which feels more like a stretch?'

6 • IF THE CONVERSATION GOES SIDeways

What to do depending on how they receive the hypothesis.

IF THEY RESONATE STRONGLY

- When the client strongly recognizes the type, affirm it briefly and then move quickly into specificity: recognition is the beginning, not the destination. The work is locating the pattern in their actual life, not confirming it abstractly.
- Ask them to move from recognition to example immediately: 'Where do you notice this most in your life right now?' Then: 'What would it mean to bring more of your own direction into that situation?'

You said you lose your own momentum and forget what you actually want — if you knew what you wanted, what do you think it would be? What comes up when you sit with that question?

IF THEY PUSH BACK OR DISAGREE

- Do not defend the hypothesis. If the client pushes back, name the pushback as useful data: 'That's worth paying attention to — let's look at what doesn't fit.' Use their resistance as an entry point, not an obstacle.
- The most likely alternate type is Type 2, which surfaced as the Stage 2 live alternative. If the client identifies more with the Two description — helping, giving, meeting others' needs — explore whether the motivation is love-seeking (Two) or peace-maintaining (Nine). Both can appear accommodating; the difference is in the emotional engine.

- If the client identifies with Type 1 instead — principled, structured, doing things right — note that One wing is possible, and ask about the relationship to inner criticism versus the relationship to harmony. Ones are driven by a sense of what's correct; Nines are driven by a desire not to disturb.
- If pushback is strong and persists, name the most useful next step: 'The assessment is a starting point, not a verdict — let's use what doesn't fit as the most interesting part of the conversation.'

Most likely alternate type: Type 2 — The Helper

Key distinguishing question: The key distinguishing question is: when you accommodate others, is the primary driver a desire to be loved and needed (Type 2), or a desire to keep things harmonious and avoid separation (Type 9)?

IF THEY'RE CONFUSED OR NEED MORE CLARITY

- If the client is confused, don't push the type — find the foothold. Start with what they did recognize: 'You said you lose your own momentum and forget what you want — that landed. Let's start there and work outward.'
- Treat what doesn't fit as equally useful: 'What's the part that feels off? That's actually great information.' Sometimes confusion signals a counter-type dynamic, a developmental shift, or simply that the client needs more time with the material.
- For a Nine specifically, confusion about type is sometimes itself diagnostic — the Nine's difficulty locating their own perspective extends to difficulty locating their own type. This is worth naming gently, without being clever about it.

Try asking: 'If you had to pick the one sentence from everything we've talked about that felt most true about you — even if nothing else did — what would it be?'