

YOUR ENNEAGRAM

Type 9

The Peacemaker

ABOUT THE ENNEAGRAM

The Enneagram is a powerful tool for personal and professional development that describes nine distinct ways of being in the world, each anchored by a core motivation that shapes how we think, feel, and act. We have access to all nine types within us, and one of them is our home base — the pattern that has been most consistent throughout our lives.

You are not your type. Your type is a strategy you developed early on to get love, safety, and belonging, and with awareness, you can work with that pattern rather than be run by it.

You are the final authority on your Enneagram type. This report offers a hypothesis about what your type might be, based on how you answered the questions in the assessment. Type discovery is a journey, and working with a qualified coach, therapist, or other trained professional can help you get clearer on your type should you wish to go deeper.

A NOTE ON THIS RESULT

Based on your responses, the pattern that appears most consistent with your experience is Type 9 — The Peacemaker. We encourage you to hold this as a hypothesis or theory that you get to test 'in the wild'. That's the fun part. If it resonates, wonderful. If it doesn't fully fit, that's important information too. Debriefing this report with a trained Enneagram coach or practitioner like Cai or Monique is a great place to explore what fits, what doesn't, and why.

WHAT WE NOTICED ABOUT YOU

You described yourself as 'easygoing, patient, calm, steady, agreeable' — and there's something quietly striking about how naturally those words come, as if steadiness and ease are simply who you are rather than something you do. Others experience you as 'reliable, supportive, easy to be around,' which tracks: you bring a kind of grounded presence that people lean into. Your greatest strength — 'staying calm and seeing all sides' — is a genuine gift, the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without needing to collapse them into a winner and a loser. And your most honest self-observation, 'I avoid conflict and can neglect my own priorities,' points toward something worth exploring: the possibility that the peacefulness you offer the world sometimes comes at the cost of your own place in it. Your responses appear to be consistent with the Enneagram's Type 9 — The Peacemaker.

YOUR TYPE AT A GLANCE

HOW YOU SEE THE WORLD

Nines experience the world as a place that is more harmonious when they stay in the background and don't insist on their own needs, preferences, or perspective. They tend to merge with the priorities of others and with the rhythms of their environment, finding peace in accommodation and discomfort in conflict or separation.

CORE MOTIVATION

Nines are driven by a deep need to maintain inner and outer peace — to preserve a sense of union and connection by avoiding conflict, minimizing their own presence, and keeping the emotional temperature stable.

Underneath this drive is an early-formed belief that belonging requires blending in, that making yourself too visible or insistent risks disrupting the harmony that feels essential. In daily life, this shows up as an almost automatic attunement to what the environment needs, a tendency to merge with the agenda of the room, and a quiet instinct to smooth over rather than stir up.

The cost, over time, is self-forgetting — a gradual loss of contact with your own priorities, preferences, and voice, until it can feel genuinely hard to locate what you truly want.

In your responses:

What runs through your responses is a consistent orientation toward harmony and okayness — not as a strategy, but as something that feels like your natural state and your job to protect. 'Staying calm and seeing all sides' points toward a worldview in which conflict and one-sidedness feel genuinely uncomfortable, not merely inconvenient. 'I avoid conflict' and 'neglect my own priorities' are consistent with the Nine's core pattern: a deep-seated sense that your own needs and agenda are somehow less urgent — or less safe to insist on — than the peace of the surrounding environment. Others describe you as 'sometimes too passive,' which aligns with what happens when a Nine's peacefulness becomes a kind of invisibility. The motivation underneath all of this appears to be less about keeping others happy and more about maintaining an internal sense of wholeness and ease — a feeling that everything is okay.

PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

Your core motivation doesn't just live in the background — it expresses itself as recognizable patterns of thinking, feeling, and behaving that show up consistently across different areas of your life.

THINKING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Attention goes first to the overall atmosphere — who's comfortable, what the room needs, whether things feel settled. Nines often notice other people's positions and preferences before they notice their own, and they may find that when they try to locate their own view, it feels fuzzy or genuinely absent.

Decisions can feel hard because every option seems to have merit, and the mind keeps generating reasons to stay with all of them rather than commit to one. Over time, this can create a sense of being a little out of focus with yourself — aware of everything around you, and less sure of what's true for you.

FEELING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Underneath the calm exterior, Nines often carry anger they don't fully recognize as anger — it gets routed away because anger threatens the peace. What shows up instead is stubbornness, a quiet dig-in that says no without saying no, or a kind of low-grade irritation that surfaces and then disappears before you can name it.

Feelings in general can feel slightly muted, as if turned down a few notches — not absent, but not quite reachable in real time. When something genuinely matters to you, it often takes longer than it should for you to notice, and longer still for you to act on it.

BEHAVIOR PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Nines tend to accommodate — reading the room, adjusting to what others seem to need, going along rather than pushing back. Energy often tends toward inertia, especially when you are facing tasks that require initiating something new or advocating for yourself.

When pressure builds, the response is frequently to slow down, get quiet, or disappear into comfortable routines rather than confront the source of the pressure directly. The resistance that does show up is usually indirect — procrastination, quiet refusal, or a stubborn digging-in that can surprise even you with how immovable it becomes.

These patterns give rise to a distinctive set of strengths and challenges. The ones below are characteristic of Type 9 — you may recognize some more than others, and that recognition itself is useful information.

STRENGTHS

- + A natural ability to create calm and safety in environments and relationships
- + Genuine empathy and the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without judgment
- + A grounded, steady presence that others instinctively trust and find reassuring

CHALLENGES

- Self-forgetting — losing touch with your own priorities, desires, and voice in the process of accommodating others
- Inertia — difficulty initiating action, especially on your own behalf, leading to procrastination or passive drift
- Conflict avoidance — a tendency to go along or stay quiet rather than assert a position, even when your perspective matters deeply

DEVELOPMENT TIPS

These practices can help you leverage your strengths and address the patterns that can hold you back.

1. Claim your own agenda. Practice naming what you want — even in small, low-stakes moments. Your preferences matter, and saying them out loud is how you learn to trust them.
2. Notice when you say "yes" and actually mean "no." This gap is often where passive resistance builds up later. If the real answer is no, let it be no.
3. Get curious about your irritation. When frustration surfaces — even as a flicker — treat it as information, not a problem. It's usually pointing to something important to you that isn't getting attention.
4. Focus on the immediate next step rather than the whole arc. Nines often stall when the full picture feels overwhelming. One small action is almost always possible, and it's often enough.
5. Welcome a little discomfort. Growth for Nines often lives on the other side of the small disruption you'd rather avoid — the hard conversation, the firm "no," the change in routine. Discomfort isn't a sign something's wrong; it's often a sign you're showing up.

ABOUT THE INSTINCTS

Alongside your core type, you have a dominant instinct — one of three innate drives that shape where your survival energy goes first. The three instincts are Self-Preservation (SP), focused on safety, comfort, health, and the practical resources of daily life; One-to-One (SX), focused on deep, intense connection with specific people or experiences; and Social (SO), focused on belonging, group dynamics, and your place within a community.

All three instincts are present in everyone, but one instinct tends to run the show. Understanding your dominant instinct helps explain why two people of the same type can look quite different in practice — the instinct flavors how the core pattern shows up in your life.

YOUR INSTINCT — SELF-PRESERVATION

Self-Preservation Nines maintain peace through the comfort of familiar routines, favorite activities, and the quiet pleasures of a well-ordered personal life. They tend to be practical and grounded, with a real gift for creating the rhythms and infrastructure that make daily life feel manageable.

The shadow side is a pull toward narcotizing comfort — food, possessions, routines that become a way of tuning out rather than engaging. SP Nines often look more self-contained than other Nines, which can make the core pattern of self-forgetting harder to spot from the outside.

In your responses:

Your Self-Preservation instinct suggests that your peace-seeking is most alive in the domain of personal comfort, security, and familiar routine. For SP Nines, the drive toward okayness often shows up less as interpersonal smoothing and more as a quiet gravitational pull toward the known and the comfortable — a preference for stable environments, predictable rhythms, and the small pleasures that signal that life is manageable. 'Neglecting your own priorities' may look, from the outside, like passivity — but from the inside it may feel more like the accumulated weight of maintaining comfort and avoiding the disruption that asserting your priorities would require. The growth edge for SP Nines often involves noticing the difference between genuine rest and comfort-as-numbing.

HOW YOUR TYPE MOVES THROUGH STRESS AND EASE

The Enneagram is not a static map — it describes movement. Each type has two resource points on the diagram: a stress point and a security point. These are the Enneagram types your energy moves toward when you're under significant pressure or when you're feeling “in flow”, safe and supported.

This movement happens at an unconscious level. You don't decide to shift toward your stress point Enneagram type— it happens automatically, driven by the same survival instincts that shaped your core pattern in the first place. Under enough pressure, you may find yourself thinking, feeling, and behaving in ways that feel uncharacteristic — more anxious, more withdrawn, more reactive — without quite knowing why. That's movement towards the stress point Enneagram type.

The same is true in the other direction. When you feel secure, resourced, and at ease, your energy moves toward your security point Enneagram type, and you gain access to qualities that don't come as naturally from your “home base” type. You may find yourself more purposeful, more open, more willing to take up space — a version of yourself that feels both unfamiliar and right.

What makes this valuable is awareness. Once you recognize these movements — in yourself, in the moment — you are no longer simply subject to them. Becoming aware of your movement to the less resourced side of your stress point is a wake-up call to pause and take care of yourself. As you develop yourself, you can access the more useful qualities of both your stress and security points intentionally, rather than waiting for circumstances to push or pull you there. The stress point, which often shows up as a less resourced version of yourself under pressure, also contains real capacities worth cultivating. The security point is not a destination you only reach when everything is going well — its higher qualities are available to you right here, right now, as a valuable resource. Finally, if you notice yourself behaving like the lower side of your security point, that is a sign that you are very stressed indeed, and need to take a pause.

UNDER STRESS

Under significant or prolonged stress, Nines can move into Type 6 territory — a shift that can feel disorienting because it's so different from your usual calm. Where you normally smooth over uncertainty and maintain steadiness, under real pressure you may find yourself becoming more anxious, doubtful, and hypervigilant — second-guessing decisions, looking for what might go wrong, or reaching for reassurance. Recognizing this movement as a stress signal — rather than a sudden personality change — can help you catch it earlier and find your way back to the groundedness that is genuinely yours.

WHEN AT EASE

When Nines feel genuinely safe, supported, and free from the pressure to maintain peace at all costs, they can access Type 3's best qualities: focused energy, purposeful engagement, and a real sense of their own direction and worth. For you, this might look like moments when you stop managing the environment and start actually moving toward something — when your natural steadiness becomes momentum rather than stillness. That movement is available to you, and the work of growth often involves creating more of the conditions that make it feel safe enough to claim.

WING INFLUENCE

ABOUT WINGS

Wings are the two types adjacent to your core type on the Enneagram. They act as neighbors — not changing who you are, but flavoring how your core type shows up. Most people lean toward one wing more than the other, though some experience both equally and some don't notice much wing influence at all.

Your wing doesn't replace your core motivation; it adds texture, giving you access to qualities from an adjacent type that can both support and complicate your core pattern.

EIGHT WING — TYPE 8

A Nine with a strong Eight wing carries more edge, more appetite, and more willingness to push back when pushed. The Eight wing brings access to anger as a useful signal rather than something to manage away, and it can give a Nine real presence and protective energy — especially on behalf of others or a cause.

The tradeoff is that when this wing is strong and the Nine hasn't done their work, irritation and stubborn force can arrive suddenly and disproportionately, then vanish back into calm accommodation. At their best, Nines with an Eight wing are grounded, unflappable, and quietly powerful — steady people who can hold their position without needing to dominate the room.

ONE WING — TYPE 1

A Nine with a stronger One wing carries more structure, more attention to doing things properly, and more internal discipline. The One wing brings a sense that things should be a certain way, and it can give a Nine genuine follow-through and conscientiousness where pure Nine energy might drift.

The tradeoff is a quiet perfectionism and self-criticism that can sharpen the Nine's self-forgetting — not just overlooking your own needs, but judging yourself for having them. At their best, Nines with a One wing are principled, dependable, and thoughtful contributors who bring care and craft to whatever they're part of.

SECONDARY TYPE HYPOTHESIS

Type 8 appeared as a consistent secondary signal throughout your assessment and is worth mentioning — not as an alternative to Type 9, but as something that may live alongside it. Eights and Nines share the Body center, which means both types carry strong instinctual energy; the difference is in what happens to it. Where Eights express that energy outward with directness and force, Nines tend to absorb and smooth it over. If you recognize moments when you've surprised yourself with unexpected forcefulness — or when the calm surface gave way to something more intense underneath — that may be the Eight wing or the Body center energy finding an outlet. This is not a contradiction of the Nine hypothesis; it's often part of what makes Nines with strong Eight energy so grounded and dependable.

WHAT TO EXPLORE WITH YOUR ENNEAGRAM COACH OR PRACTITIONER

These questions are designed to help you get the most out of your work with a coach or practitioner. Take a moment to sit with each one before your session.

1. At the heart of the Type 9 pattern is a deep pull toward harmony and okayness — a sense that peace is both your natural home and something you work to protect. As you think about your life right now, where do you feel that pull most strongly? And what would you most like to explore with your Enneagram coach or practitioner about what it costs you — and what it gives you?
2. Think of a specific challenge or opportunity you're navigating right now — something with real stakes for you personally. As you imagine yourself in the middle of it, notice: how does your tendency to 'stay calm and see all sides' show up? Is it helping you hold the complexity, getting in the way of you taking a clear position, or somehow both at once?
3. Some of the strengths that appear to be most alive in you include steadiness, perspective-taking, patience, and the ability to create calm for others. Some of the challenges may include conflict avoidance, self-neglect, and difficulty asserting your own priorities. Which of these would you most like to bring more of — or work on — and what makes that the one?