SP Nine — The Self-Preservation Peacemaker

MEDIUM-HIGH CONFIDENCE

This report is designed as a session prep tool — organized around the debrief conversation you'll have with your client, not around how the assessment engine arrived at its hypothesis. Read Section 1 for the quick read. Use Sections 2 through 5 as a companion during the debrief itself. Section 6 offers contingency guidance depending on how the conversation unfolds.

THE READ

This is a clean Nine presentation — arguably one of the clearest you'll see. The Stage 0 language is almost archetypal: 'easygoing, patient, calm, steady, agreeable' as self-description; 'reliable, supportive, easy to be around, sometimes too passive' from others; 'staying calm and seeing all sides' as greatest strength; 'I avoid conflict and can neglect my own priorities' as the problematic quality. That last line is the Nine's core wound stated in plain language, which is both a strong diagnostic signal and a sign that this client has some self-awareness about the pattern. The Body center was confirmed HIGH, SP instinct was confirmed HIGH, and all three Stage 2 frameworks aligned cleanly on Type 9. Type 8 was a persistent secondary — likely the Eight-wing showing up — but never challenged the Nine hypothesis in any stage. The one note worth holding is the self-typed Type 2 claim in the final open response, which the data does not support and which may reflect the client identifying with warmth and relational presence as identity rather than structural motivation. That's a productive debrief moment, not a concern.

GOING IN

- Confidence is MEDIUM_HIGH. All five stages point to Type 9. The slight downgrade reflects 'both, leaning' answers at Stage 3 and Stage 4 — all confirmation dimensions had a secondary Type 8 pull. This is almost certainly Eight-wing rather than genuine type ambiguity.
- The client may recognize the Nine pattern immediately — the self-description is unusually clear and self-aware. The more interesting conversation may be less 'do you recognize this?' and more 'what has it cost you?'
- Watch for the Nine's characteristic agreeableness showing up in the debrief itself — they may validate the hypothesis not because it resonates but because they don't want to push back. Explicitly invite disagreement and notice what happens.
- The client indicated they thought they were a Type 2. The engine did not confirm this — the data supports Type 9 cleanly. This is worth naming early in the debrief: acknowledge it, honor the self-reflection, and invite them to sit with both possibilities. The Type 2 claim likely reflects identification with warmth and care-giving as values, not structural Type 2 motivation.
- The SP instinct is HIGH confidence (gap of 4). The SP Nine subtype — comfort-seeking, routine-oriented, private — is the organizing lens for this debrief.

2 · DEBRIEFING CORE MOTIVATION AND WORLDVIEW

How to present the heart of the type and connect it to their own words.

THE CORE PATTERN

- Type 9's core motivation is the preservation of inner peace — not as a preference but as a survival orientation. The world feels okay when there is no conflict, no disruption, no demand that they take a strong position. The core fear is loss of connection and fragmentation — inner and outer.
- The Nine's central strategy is merging: going along, accommodating, taking on others' agendas, seeing all sides. This is not passive weakness; it is an active and often unconscious management of the environment to keep disruption at bay.
- The cost of this strategy is self-forgetting. The Nine's own priorities, desires, and voice become quiet over time — not through dramatic sacrifice but through a thousand small moments of 'it doesn't matter, whatever you think is fine.' The client named this directly: 'can neglect my own priorities.'
- Nines often have a genuinely warm, grounded presence that others find stabilizing. The gift is real. The work is learning to extend that same generous attention to themselves.

WHAT THEIR RESPONSES SHOWED

- 'Easygoing, patient, calm, steady, agreeable' — five consecutive words that describe the Nine's self-idealization with precision. This is someone who has organized their identity around being easy, undemanding, and harmonious.

- 'Sometimes too passive' (from others) is the outside view of the Nine's self-forgetting strategy — others can see the cost even when the Nine is still holding it as a virtue.
- 'Staying calm and seeing all sides' as greatest strength is the Nine's genuine gift for unconditional positive regard and multi-perspectival thinking — worth affirming before moving toward shadow work.
- 'I avoid conflict and can neglect my own priorities' is not a generic self-criticism — it is an accurate, specific naming of the Nine's core pattern. This level of self-awareness suggests readiness to work at depth.

COACHING NOTES

- Start with the strength. 'Staying calm and seeing all sides' is a real and undervalued gift. Letting them receive that before moving to shadow creates safety and prevents the debrief from feeling like a list of problems.
- When you introduce the worldview, watch for the Nine's tendency to agree readily. Slow down and ask: 'Does this land as true, or does it feel like something you think you should agree with?' Nines can validate a hypothesis out of agreeableness rather than recognition.
- The phrase 'neglect my own priorities' is a doorway — it's already named, which means it's partially conscious. The coaching move is to get underneath it: what are their priorities? Can they name them? That inability to name them is often the deeper Nine revelation.

Try asking: 'When you say you neglect your own priorities — can you tell me what one of those priorities actually is right now? Something that matters to you that you haven't been attending to?'

3 · DEBRIEFING PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

What to expect and what to watch for as you walk through type patterns.

CENTERS OF INTELLIGENCE

Body Center •		18 / 18
Heart Center		12 / 18
Head Center		6 / 18

LIKELY TO RESONATE EASILY

- A natural ability to create calm and safety in environments and relationships
- Genuine empathy and the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without judgment
- A grounded, steady presence that others instinctively trust and find reassuring

MAY TAKE MORE CAREFUL UNPACKING

- Self-forgetting — losing touch with your own priorities, desires, and voice in the process of accommodating others
- Inertia — difficulty initiating action, especially on your own behalf, leading to procrastination or passive drift
- Conflict avoidance — a tendency to go along or stay quiet rather than assert a position, even when your perspective matters deeply

MAY BE HARDEST TO SEE

- The Nine's anger is the most consistently invisible thing in their pattern. They named 'avoiding conflict' as a problem but are unlikely to connect that avoidance to suppressed anger. For Nines, anger isn't experienced as anger — it dissipates into inertia, stubbornness, or passive withdrawal. The question is whether they ever notice a quiet heaviness, resistance, or 'I just don't want to' in situations where a direct response might be more useful.
- Self-erasure as a strategy is hard for Nines to see because it has been adaptive — going along has kept relationships intact and kept the environment peaceful. The cost (neglecting priorities, passivity) is named here, but the mechanism — that the Nine is actively choosing to become smaller — may not yet be visible.
- The client may not recognize how much energy goes into maintaining the 'easygoing' presentation. Nines often experience themselves as naturally calm, not as working to stay calm. The distinction matters: is this their natural state, or is it a management strategy?

HOW THE CLIENT APPEARS TO MOVE — THE THREE FRAMEWORK SIGNALS

These are cross-referenced patterns that showed up consistently in their responses. Each offers a different lens on the type — worth weaving in conversationally rather than introducing as categories.

SOCIAL STYLE — WITHDRAWING

- As a Withdrawing type, this Nine manages energy by pulling inward — not dramatically, but through the quiet non-engagement that reads as 'easygoing.' When things get difficult, they are more likely to disappear internally than to push back or accommodate visibly.
- The Withdrawn stance means they are not primarily oriented toward either asserting (like an Eight) or complying (like a Two) — they are oriented toward maintaining inner equilibrium. This can look like flexibility from outside, but inside it is often self-containment.
- For this client specifically, 'sometimes too passive' from others may reflect the Withdrawn Nine's tendency to go quiet rather than engage when engagement would require taking a position.

Weave in: 'When things feel tense or uncomfortable in a relationship or group, what do you tend to do internally — do you find yourself going somewhere else in your mind, or pulling back somehow?'

EMOTIONAL STYLE — POSITIVE OUTLOOK

- The Positive Outlook Harmonic means this Nine tends to reframe difficulty, minimize what is painful, and maintain a benign view of situations and people. 'Staying calm and seeing all sides' is a Positive Outlook signature — it keeps things manageable and prevents the disruption of negative emotion.
- The shadow of this pattern is that real pain, frustration, or anger may be consistently reframed into something neutral or workable — which means it never gets fully processed or addressed.
- For this client, it may be useful to notice: when something genuinely disappoints or frustrates you, what happens to that feeling? Does it have somewhere to go, or does it get quietly resolved into 'it's fine'?

Weave in: 'Is there anything in your life right now that you've been telling yourself is fine — but that actually isn't quite?'

ATTACHMENT STYLE — ATTACHMENT

- Attachment types (3, 6, 9) organize around their relationship to the group or environment they are embedded in. For the Nine, attachment looks like maintaining connection by not rocking the boat — they stay attached by becoming whatever the relational field needs them to be.
- This client's language — 'reliable, supportive, easy to be around' — describes someone who has become a stabilizing presence in their environment, often at the cost of their own agenda.
- The Attachment pattern means disconnection or conflict is genuinely threatening at a structural level — not just uncomfortable. Understanding this can help explain why conflict avoidance isn't simply a preference but feels like a survival mechanism.

Weave in: 'What does it feel like when there's tension or distance with someone important to you — not just uncomfortable, but what happens in your body or your sense of yourself?'

COACHING NOTES FOR THIS SECTION

- Move slowly through the shadow dimensions. This client has named the pattern ('avoid conflict, neglect priorities') but naming it and inhabiting it are different. The coaching move is to help them feel the pattern, not just report it.

- The anger dimension is delicate — Nines often reject the idea that they are angry. Use 'resistance' or 'heaviness' or 'stubbornness' as entry points rather than 'anger' directly. Let them find the word.
- The Positive Outlook note is worth introducing as a compassionate observation, not a confrontation: 'I wonder if there's a way you tend to resolve things into okay-ness before they've really had a chance to land?' Watch for the pause that follows.

Try asking: 'I'm curious — when you notice you're avoiding something, where do you feel that in your body? Is there a physical sense of it?'

4 • DEBRIEFING INSTINCT AND SUBTYPE

Their particular flavor of Type 9, and why it matters.

INSTINCT RANKING

SP NINE — THE SELF-PRESERVATION PEACEMAKER — HOW THE INSTINCT SHAPES THE TYPE

- SP Nines tend to seek peace through the immediate environment — through comfort, routine, familiar rhythms, and the particular pleasures of everyday life. Peace is found in the small, reliable things: a comfortable home, a familiar routine, a steady relationship. Disruption of these feels disproportionately destabilizing.
- The SP Nine's self-forgetting often happens close to home — in the immediate relational and domestic environment. 'Neglecting my own priorities' for an SP Nine may look like consistently deferring to the comfort of the household or close relationships rather than pursuing outward goals.
- SP Nines can appear more introverted and self-contained than other Nine subtypes — their merging happens inwardly, with the familiar environment, rather than outwardly with the social group (SO Nine) or dramatically with another person (SX Nine).
- This subtype can be particularly easy to miss as a Nine because they don't always present as visibly merged with others — they just quietly attend to the comfort of the immediate environment and call it peace.

WHY THIS SUBTYPE CAN BE EASY TO MISS

- SP Nines are sometimes mistaken for Type 5 because of their preference for a quiet, contained life — they can seem self-sufficient and private rather than merged or accommodating.
- They can also look like Type 1 in their attention to the order and maintenance of their immediate environment — a routinized, steady quality that reads as conscientiousness rather than Nine-style comfort-seeking.

- The Type 2 self-identification makes sense in a particular way for SP Nines — they often do show warmth, care, and supportiveness toward their close circle, which can feel like a Two pattern. The difference is the driver: the Nine attends to others to maintain peace; the Two attends to others to secure love and avoid rejection.
- The HIGH SP score (12/12, full marks) in this assessment suggests the instinct is pronounced and dominant — this client's Nine pattern is likely most visible in the home, in close relationships, and in daily habits.

COACHING NOTES

- Introduce the instinct after the type lands — let them recognize Nine first, then add SP as the lens that explains the particular flavor of their Nine-ness.
- The 'neglecting own priorities' note is an SP Nine signature. Help them articulate what those priorities are and what gets in the way of attending to them. Often the answer is not dramatic — it's comfort, inertia, and the preference for the familiar.
- Watch for the SP Nine's stubbornness as a form of self-protection — they may not push back verbally in the session but may quietly go along while internally not landing on the hypothesis. Build in explicit check-ins.

Try asking: 'When you think about your typical day or week, what are the routines or habits that feel most important to you — the things that when they're disrupted, something feels off?'

5 • DEBRIEFING WINGS, LINES, AND RESOURCES

What they have available, especially under pressure.

STRESS MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 6

- Under stress, Nines move toward Type 6 — and this client's Stage 4 stress answer leaned in that direction, with a secondary Type 8 pull. The movement toward Six looks like anxiety, worry, and seeking reassurance: the usually calm Nine starts second-guessing, scanning for what might go wrong, and feeling uncertain about where they stand.
- This is often the Nine's first sign that they've been accommodating too long without attending to themselves. The anxiety isn't random — it's often about something that was never named directly.
- Coaching angle: when you notice the client expressing worry or seeking reassurance in the session, consider naming it gently — 'I notice there's some uncertainty showing up here; I'm curious what's underneath that for you.'

Try asking: 'When things feel particularly difficult or out of control, what tends to happen to that calmness you described? Does it stay, or does something else show up?'

SECURITY MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 3

- In security, Nines move toward Type 3 — and the client's Stage 4 security answer leaned here. The Nine accessing Three qualities looks like greater purposefulness, self-direction, and the ability to take action toward their own goals rather than others'.
- This is one of the most important growth edges for Nines to understand: that sense of having clear direction and doing something for themselves is not vanity or selfishness — it is what integration looks like for this type.
- Coaching angle: explore what conditions allow this more purposeful, active version of themselves to come forward. What would need to be true for that to be available more often?

Try asking: 'Think of a time when you felt really engaged with something — like you were actually going somewhere with intention. What was that like, and what made it possible?'

WINGS — TYPE 8 AND TYPE 1

- Type 9 has wings at 8 and 1. The Eight-wing (9w8) brings more assertiveness, directness, and a capacity to take up space — this Nine is less likely to disappear completely and may have a more grounded, even stubborn quality. The persistent Type 8 signal across Stages 2, 3, and 4 suggests this client may carry a meaningful Eight-wing.
- The One-wing (9w1) brings principled, idealistic, and orderly qualities — a Nine with a strong One-wing often has a sense of right and wrong that can motivate action in a way that raw peace-seeking does not.
- Both wings are worth naming, but let the client lead — ask which description feels more familiar and use their answer to refine the picture.
- If the Eight-wing is dominant (which the data suggests is possible), this Nine may have access to more assertiveness than their 'easygoing' self-description implies — and may underutilize it because it feels at odds with their peaceful identity.

Try asking: 'When you read about the two sides of Type 9 — one that has more of a direct, stubborn edge, and one that has more of a principled, orderly quality — which one feels more like you when you're at your most grounded?'

6 • IF THE CONVERSATION GOES SIDEWAYS

What to do depending on how they receive the hypothesis.

IF THEY RESONATE STRONGLY

- When the client strongly agrees, affirm the recognition and then move immediately to specificity: what is one moment from the last week where they can see this pattern in action? Move from 'yes, that's me' to 'and here is where it lives in my actual life.'

- Strong resonance with Nine can sometimes be its own trap — the Nine pattern includes being agreeable about the hypothesis. Notice if the agreement feels settled and embodied, or if it feels quick and accommodating. If it feels quick, slow down.
- Use strong resonance as a launching point for the growth conversation: 'So if this is real — if this pattern is as present as you're describing — what's one thing you'd want to do differently in the next week?'

What feels most true in what we've explored today — and what would it mean to actually act on that?

IF THEY PUSH BACK OR DISAGREE

- Do not defend the hypothesis. If the client pushes back, receive it with curiosity: 'Tell me more about what doesn't fit — that's useful information.'
- The most likely alternate worth exploring is Type 2. The client already named it themselves, and the pattern overlap is real: both Nines and Twos are warm, relational, other-oriented. The distinguishing question is motivational.
- If they lean toward Type 2, bring the key distinction to the table and sit with it together: is the core drive to be helpful and needed (Two), or to avoid conflict and maintain inner calm (Nine)? Let them feel into which feels closer.
- It's also possible the Type 8 secondary signal reflects something real — particularly an Eight-wing. If they push back on 'easygoing,' wonder with them: 'Are there contexts where you're more direct and assertive than that word suggests?'

Most likely alternate type: Type 2 — The Giver

Key distinguishing question: The key distinguishing question is: when you do things for others, is the deeper drive to be helpful and feel needed (Type 2) — or is it to keep things smooth and avoid the discomfort of conflict (Type 9)?

IF THEY'RE CONFUSED OR NEED MORE CLARITY

- If the client is confused, find the foothold that does land — even one sentence from the type description that feels true — and start there. Confusion is not failure; it often means they're sitting with the hypothesis honestly rather than just agreeing.
- Treat what doesn't fit as equally useful: 'What feels off about this? Tell me what doesn't land.' The misfit often reveals something important about how they experience themselves that the standard description doesn't capture.
- For Nines specifically, confusion can itself be a Nine pattern — the difficulty of pinpointing a clear self-position is part of the type's structure. This can be named gently as a compassionate observation, not a gotcha.

If you had to pick just one thing from today that felt true — even a little bit — what would it be?

6A • TYPE CONFUSION OBSERVATION BLOCK

Types in question: Type 9 and Type 2. Use only if the client brought in their type confusion observation during the session.

WHAT TO DO WITH WHAT THEY BRING

- Bring the client's own Stage 0 language into the room explicitly. Read back their self-description: 'easygoing, patient, calm, steady, agreeable' — and ask: does the drive here feel like wanting to be needed and helpful, or like wanting things to be easy and peaceful?
- The core motivation question is the right tool here: Type 2 fears being unloved unless they are giving; Type 9 fears disruption, fragmentation, and conflict. Ask the client to sit with both and notice which has more charge — which one, when they read it, makes them feel slightly exposed.
- Listen for how they describe their experience with others: if they talk primarily about wanting to help and be appreciated, Two has more support. If they talk about wanting to keep things smooth and not wanting to deal with tension, Nine has more support.
- Hold Type 8 lightly in the background as a possible wing explanation — if the client feels some pull toward directness or assertiveness, that can be folded in as Eight-wing of Nine rather than evidence of a different primary type.

IF THE OBSERVATION DIDN'T YIELD CLEAR DATA

- Type 9's self-forgetting happens below the level of conscious choice — which means self-report often undercounts it. The client may not have a clear felt sense of what they want, which makes it hard to report on neglecting it. This is itself a Nine signal.
- Type 2's giving can feel natural and self-directed to the Two, which means they often don't experience themselves as over-giving — they experience themselves as caring. If this client doesn't resonate with feeling 'too giving' or manipulative, that's a mild disconfirm for Two.
- Both types can present as warm, relational, and other-oriented. The difference is most visible in moments of conflict or clear divergence of interest: does the Nine go quiet and smooth things over, or does the Two double down on helpfulness to re-secure the relationship?

Try asking: 'When someone important to you is upset or distant, what's the first thing that happens inside you — do you feel pulled to do something for them, or do you feel pulled to make the tension go away?'
