

HIVE ENNEAGRAM REPORT PREPARED FOR TEST SP9

Type 9

The Peacemaker

ABOUT THE ENNEAGRAM

The Enneagram is a powerful tool for personal and professional development that describes nine distinct ways of being in the world, each anchored by a core motivation that shapes how we think, feel, and act. We have access to all nine types within us, and one of them is our home base — the pattern that has been most consistent throughout our lives.

You are not your type. Your type is a strategy you developed early on to get love, safety, and belonging, and with awareness, you can work with that pattern rather than be run by it.

You are the final authority on your Enneagram type. This report offers a hypothesis about what your type might be, based on how you answered the questions in the assessment. Type discovery is a journey, and working with a qualified coach, therapist, or other trained professional can help you get clearer on your type should you wish to go deeper.

A NOTE ON THIS RESULT

Based on your responses, the pattern that appears most consistent with your experience is Type 9 — The Peacemaker. We encourage you to hold this as a hypothesis or theory that you get to test 'in the wild'. That's the fun part. If it resonates, wonderful. If it doesn't fully fit, that's important information too. Debriefing this report with a trained Enneagram coach or practitioner like Cai or Monique is a great place to explore what fits, what doesn't, and why.

WHAT WE NOTICED ABOUT YOU

The words you used to describe yourself — 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady calming presence' — paint a vivid picture of someone who brings genuine calm to the people and environments around them. That quality of groundedness you named as your greatest strength, 'stability and presence — I keep things grounded,' is real and valuable, and others clearly experience it: they describe you as reliable and kind.

What caught our attention most, though, was how honestly you named the shadow side: 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want.' That's a rare level of self-awareness, and it points toward the heart of what we noticed in your responses — a pattern that the Enneagram calls Type 9, the Peacemaker.

The Peacemaker's gift is exactly what you described: a steadying, harmonizing presence that helps others feel at ease. The challenge, also exactly as you named it, is the tendency to forget oneself in the process — to merge with the flow of others' needs and agendas until your own direction gets quietly lost.

YOUR TYPE AT A GLANCE

HOW YOU SEE THE WORLD

Nines experience the world as a place that is more harmonious when they stay in the background and don't insist on their own needs, preferences, or perspective. They tend to merge with the priorities of others and with the rhythms of their environment, finding peace in accommodation and discomfort in conflict or separation.

CORE MOTIVATION

Nines are driven by a deep need to maintain inner and outer peace — to preserve a sense of union and connection by avoiding conflict, minimizing their own presence, and keeping the emotional temperature stable.

Underneath this drive is an early-formed belief that belonging requires blending in, that making yourself too visible or insistent risks disrupting the harmony that feels essential. In daily life, this shows up as an almost automatic attunement to what the environment needs, a tendency to merge with the agenda of the room, and a quiet instinct to smooth over rather than stir up.

The cost, over time, is self-forgetting — a gradual loss of contact with your own priorities, preferences, and voice, until it can feel genuinely hard to locate what you truly want.

In your responses: At the core of the Type 9 pattern is a deep desire for inner peace and harmony — and a corresponding tendency to avoid whatever might disrupt that peace, including conflict, but also including the discomfort of asserting your own wants and priorities. Your description of losing your own momentum and forgetting what you actually want is one of the clearest expressions of this dynamic: it's not that the Nine doesn't have wants, it's that attending to them feels risky in some quiet, hard-to-articulate way. Your self-description of being 'go-with-the-flow' and your strength as a 'steady calming presence' are consistent with the Nine's orientation toward harmony and away from disruption. Others noting you are 'hard to read' and 'sometimes stubborn' also aligns — Nines can be genuinely difficult to read because their inner world is often not fully visible even to themselves, and the stubbornness tends to emerge when something threatens the stability they've built.

PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

Your core motivation doesn't just live in the background — it expresses itself as recognizable patterns of thinking, feeling, and behaving that show up consistently across different areas of your life.

THINKING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Attention goes first to the overall atmosphere — who's comfortable, what the room needs, whether things feel settled. Nines often notice other people's positions and preferences before they notice their own, and they may find that when they try to locate their own view, it feels fuzzy or genuinely absent.

Decisions can feel hard because every option seems to have merit, and the mind keeps generating reasons to stay with all of them rather than commit to one. Over time, this can create a sense of being a little out of focus with yourself — aware of everything around you, and less sure of what's true for you.

FEELING PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Underneath the calm exterior, Nines often carry anger they don't fully recognize as anger — it gets routed away because anger threatens the peace. What shows up instead is stubbornness, a quiet dig-in that says no without saying no, or a kind of low-grade irritation that surfaces and then disappears before you can name it.

Feelings in general can feel slightly muted, as if turned down a few notches — not absent, but not quite reachable in real time. When something genuinely matters to you, it often takes longer than it should for you to notice, and longer still for you to act on it.

BEHAVIOR PATTERNS OF A TYPE 9 — THE PEACEMAKER

Nines tend to accommodate — reading the room, adjusting to what others seem to need, going along rather than pushing back. Energy often tends toward inertia, especially when you are facing tasks that require initiating something new or advocating for yourself.

When pressure builds, the response is frequently to slow down, get quiet, or disappear into comfortable routines rather than confront the source of the pressure directly. The resistance that does show up is usually indirect — procrastination, quiet refusal, or a stubborn digging-in that can surprise even you with how immovable it becomes.

These patterns give rise to a distinctive set of strengths and challenges. The ones below are characteristic of Type 9 — you may recognize some more than others, and that recognition itself is useful information.

STRENGTHS

- + A natural ability to create calm and safety in environments and relationships
- + Genuine empathy and the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without judgment
- + A grounded, steady presence that others instinctively trust and find reassuring

CHALLENGES

- Self-forgetting — losing touch with your own priorities, desires, and voice in the process of accommodating others
- Inertia — difficulty initiating action, especially on your own behalf, leading to procrastination or passive drift
- Conflict avoidance — a tendency to go along or stay quiet rather than assert a position, even when your perspective matters deeply

DEVELOPMENT TIPS

These practices can help you leverage your strengths and address the patterns that can hold you back.

1. Claim your own agenda. Practice naming what you want — even in small, low-stakes moments. Your preferences matter, and saying them out loud is how you learn to trust them.
2. Notice when you say "yes" and actually mean "no." This gap is often where passive resistance builds up later. If the real answer is no, let it be no.

3. Get curious about your irritation. When frustration surfaces — even as a flicker — treat it as information, not a problem. It's usually pointing to something important to you that isn't getting attention.
4. Focus on the immediate next step rather than the whole arc. Nines often stall when the full picture feels overwhelming. One small action is almost always possible, and it's often enough.
5. Welcome a little discomfort. Growth for Nines often lives on the other side of the small disruption you'd rather avoid — the hard conversation, the firm "no," the change in routine. Discomfort isn't a sign something's wrong; it's often a sign you're showing up.

ABOUT THE INSTINCTS

Alongside your core type, you have a dominant instinct — one of three innate drives that shape where your survival energy goes first. The three instincts are Self-Preservation (SP), focused on safety, comfort, health, and the practical resources of daily life; One-to-One (SX), focused on deep, intense connection with specific people or experiences; and Social (SO), focused on belonging, group dynamics, and your place within a community.

All three instincts are present in everyone, but one instinct tends to run the show. Understanding your dominant instinct helps explain why two people of the same type can look quite different in practice — the instinct flavors how the core pattern shows up in your life.

YOUR INSTINCT — SELF-PRESERVATION

Self-Preservation Nines maintain peace through the comfort of familiar routines, favorite activities, and the quiet pleasures of a well-ordered personal life. They tend to be practical and grounded, with a real gift for creating the rhythms and infrastructure that make daily life feel manageable.

The shadow side is a pull toward narcotizing comfort — food, possessions, routines that become a way of tuning out rather than engaging. SP Nines often look more self-contained than other Nines, which can make the core pattern of self-forgetting harder to spot from the outside.

In your responses: Your dominant instinct appears to be Self-Preservation — meaning that the Nine's search for peace gets enacted most strongly through building comfort, stability, and routine in your immediate environment and daily life. This is consistent with your emphasis on being 'steady,' 'grounded,' and providing 'stability and presence' — these are SP Nine qualities, the peace that comes from having a reliable, settled foundation. SP Nines often express the type's characteristic stubbornness most visibly here: when the routines, structures, or comfort that provide that sense of peace are threatened, a quiet but firm resistance can emerge — which may be part of what others are noticing when they describe you as 'sometimes stubborn.'

HOW YOUR TYPE MOVES THROUGH STRESS AND EASE

The Enneagram is not a static map — it describes movement. Each type has two resource points on the diagram: a stress point and a security point. These are the Enneagram types your energy moves toward when you're under significant pressure or when you're feeling “in flow”, safe and supported.

This movement happens at an unconscious level. You don't decide to shift toward your stress point Enneagram type— it happens automatically, driven by the same survival instincts that shaped your core pattern in the first place. Under enough pressure, you may find yourself thinking, feeling, and behaving in ways that feel uncharacteristic — more anxious, more withdrawn, more reactive — without quite knowing why. That's movement towards the stress point Enneagram type.

The same is true in the other direction. When you feel secure, resourced, and at ease, your energy moves toward your security point Enneagram type, and you gain access to qualities that don't come as naturally from your “home base” type. You may find yourself more purposeful, more open, more willing to take up space — a version of yourself that feels both unfamiliar and right.

What makes this valuable is awareness. Once you recognize these movements — in yourself, in the moment — you are no longer simply subject to them. Becoming aware of your movement to the less resourced side of your stress point is a wake-up call to pause and take care of yourself. As you develop yourself, you can access the more useful qualities of both your stress and security points intentionally, rather than waiting for circumstances to push or pull you there. The stress point, which often shows up as a less resourced version of yourself under pressure, also contains real capacities worth cultivating. The security point is not a destination you only reach when everything is going well — its higher qualities are available to you right here, right now, as a valuable resource. Finally, if you notice yourself behaving like the lower side of your security point, that is a sign that you are very stressed indeed, and need to take a pause.

UNDER STRESS

Under significant stress, Nines can move into Type 6 territory — and you recognized this pattern: increased anxiety, worst-case thinking, and a pull toward seeking reassurance from the people around you. This is worth knowing because it can feel like a sudden personality shift, a departure from the groundedness that normally defines you.

Recognizing this movement is genuinely useful — it's an early signal that your reserves are depleted and your sense of inner stability has been disrupted. The reassurance-seeking is real, but the deeper need is usually to reconnect with your own ground.

WHEN AT EASE

When you feel genuinely safe and supported, Nines can access Type 3's positive qualities — and you recognized this too: increased energy, productivity, a clearer sense of direction and accomplishment. This is the Nine moving toward themselves, reclaiming the momentum and purpose that the stress pattern obscures.

This is one of the most important things to understand about your growth path: the energy, direction, and drive that feel distant or hard to access in ordinary life are actually available to you — they show up naturally when conditions feel safe. Part of the work is learning how to create those conditions more intentionally.

WING INFLUENCE

ABOUT WINGS

Wings are the two types adjacent to your core type on the Enneagram. They act as neighbors — not changing who you are, but flavoring how your core type shows up. Most people lean toward one wing more than the other, though some experience both equally and some don't notice much wing influence at all.

Your wing doesn't replace your core motivation; it adds texture, giving you access to qualities from an adjacent type that can both support and complicate your core pattern.

EIGHT WING — TYPE 8

A Nine with a strong Eight wing carries more edge, more appetite, and more willingness to push back when pushed. The Eight wing brings access to anger as a useful signal rather than something to manage away, and it can give a Nine real presence and protective energy — especially on behalf of others or a cause.

The tradeoff is that when this wing is strong and the Nine hasn't done their work, irritation and stubborn force can arrive suddenly and disproportionately, then vanish back into calm accommodation. At their best, Nines with an Eight wing are grounded, unflappable, and quietly powerful — steady people who can hold their position without needing to dominate the room.

ONE WING — TYPE 1

A Nine with a stronger One wing carries more structure, more attention to doing things properly, and more internal discipline. The One wing brings a sense that things should be a certain way, and it can give a Nine genuine follow-through and conscientiousness where pure Nine energy might drift.

The tradeoff is a quiet perfectionism and self-criticism that can sharpen the Nine's self-forgetting — not just overlooking your own needs, but judging yourself for having them. At their best, Nines with a One wing are principled, dependable, and thoughtful contributors who bring care and craft to whatever they're part of.

SECONDARY TYPE HYPOTHESIS

Type 2 emerged as a secondary signal in the assessment — not strongly enough to challenge the Type 9 hypothesis, but worth naming. The warmth, kindness, and relational care that others notice in you have a natural resonance with both types: Nines and Twos can look similar in their attentiveness to others and their desire to keep relationships harmonious.

The key distinction is motivational: for a Two, the care and giving tend to be connected to a need to be needed or loved in return. For a Nine, the care and attunement are more about maintaining connection and peace — merging with others' experience rather than seeking something back from it. If any part of the Two description feels true — a sense that your giving is connected to wanting to feel valued or indispensable — that's worth exploring in your session.

WHAT TO EXPLORE WITH YOUR ENNEAGRAM COACH OR PRACTITIONER

These questions are designed to help you get the most out of your work with a coach or practitioner. Take a moment to sit with each one before your session.

1. At the center of the Type 9 pattern is a deep desire for peace and harmony — and a tendency to maintain that peace by letting your own wants and priorities slip into the background. Where do you notice this most in your life right now? And what feels most alive for you to explore with your Enneagram coach or practitioner about this pattern?

2. Think of a specific challenge or opportunity you're navigating right now — something that has some real stakes for you. As you bring it to mind, notice: are you moving toward what you actually want in that situation, or are you moving toward what keeps things smooth? Are those the same thing, or different — and what happens inside when they're different?
3. Some of the key strengths of your pattern include: steadiness, genuine calm, attunement to others, patience, and the ability to hold space for people. Some of the edges include: difficulty maintaining your own momentum, self-forgetting, avoiding conflict even when it matters, and a tendency to defer your own priorities. Which of these — a strength you'd like to bring more fully into your life, or an edge you're ready to work with — feels most important to bring to your session?

Generated by the Hive Enneagram Type Hypothesizer · © Copyright 2026, Hive, Inc. All rights reserved.