SP Nine — The Self-Preservation Peacemaker

HIGH CONFIDENCE

This report is designed as a session prep tool — organized around the debrief conversation you'll have with your client, not around how the assessment engine arrived at its hypothesis. Read Section 1 for the quick read. Use Sections 2 through 5 as a companion during the debrief itself. Section 6 offers contingency guidance depending on how the conversation unfolds.

PRIMARY HYPOTHESISType 9 — The Peacemaker*DOMINANT INSTINCT*Self-Preservation (SP)*CONFIDENCE*HIGH*ALTERNATE TO HOLD LIGHTLY*Type 2 — The Giver*COUNTER-TYPE*Not flagged

THE READ

This is one of the cleanest Nine reads the data can produce. Every stage aligned without ambiguity, Stage 4 confirmed all three markers, and the Stage 0 language is almost instructively on-type — 'peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow, steady calming presence' reads like the Nine's idealized self-image written from the inside. What's most striking is the shadow statement: 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want.' That's a high degree of self-awareness for a Nine — they're naming the self-forgetting pattern clearly, which suggests they've bumped up against it enough to notice it, even if the deeper mechanics are still below the waterline. The SP instinct adds an interesting layer: this Nine's peace is likely organized around comfort, routine, and a stable personal environment rather than relational merger, which may explain why others find them 'hard to read.' The stubborn descriptor from others is worth paying attention to — it's the Nine's passive resistance finally surfacing when they've been pushed past their threshold.

GOING IN

- Confidence is HIGH across all dimensions — Center, Instinct, Stage 2, Stage 3, and Stage 4 all pointed cleanly to SP Nine. You can open the debrief with more certainty than usual.

- The client named their shadow with notable directness ('I forget what I actually want') — they may be more ready to sit with the self-forgetting pattern than a typical Nine. Don't rush past this; it's a doorway.
- The 'hard to read' and 'sometimes stubborn' descriptors from others are worth flagging — they often surprise Nines, who experience themselves as easygoing and accommodating. The gap between self-perception and others' experience is a productive tension to explore.
- No counter-type, no redirect, no ambiguity flags. The primary debrief risk is the Nine's natural tendency to agree with everything and report resonance without real contact — watch for that in session.

2 • DEBRIEFING CORE MOTIVATION AND WORLDVIEW

How to present the heart of the type and connect it to their own words.

THE CORE PATTERN

- The Nine's core motivation is the desire for inner peace and harmony — to feel undisturbed, connected, and at ease. The world is experienced as threatening to disrupt that peace, and the Nine's entire adaptive strategy is organized around maintaining it.
- The core wound is a sense that their own presence, needs, and desires don't matter — or create conflict when expressed. The solution the Nine found early was to minimize their own agenda, merge with the priorities of others, and keep the relational field smooth.
- Self-forgetting is not passive or lazy — it's an active (if unconscious) strategy. The Nine doesn't lose themselves by accident; they trade their own direction for the felt sense of peace that comes from not rocking the boat.
- The SP Nine's version of this is often quieter and more internal: they may not merge outwardly with others' social agendas as visibly as SO Nines do, but they can lose themselves in comfort, routine, and distraction — filling the space their own desires would occupy with the path of least resistance.

WHAT THEIR RESPONSES SHOWED

- 'Peaceful, easygoing, go-with-the-flow' — the client's self-description maps directly onto the Nine's idealized self-image. This isn't just behavior description; it reads as identity language — this is who they understand themselves to be.
- 'Stability and presence — I keep things grounded' — the client names their strength in terms of what they provide for others. The Nine's gift is real, and this framing is characteristic: their value is understood relationally and environmentally, not in terms of personal ambition or achievement.
- 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want' — this is the Nine's shadow named plainly. The language of 'forgetting' is important: it's not that they choose against their desires, it's that the desires themselves become unavailable.
- 'Sometimes stubborn, hard to read' from others — the Nine's passive resistance (stubbornness) and merger-smoothed surface (hard to read) showing up in how others experience them, in contrast to the client's own self-perception of being open and easygoing.

COACHING NOTES

- Lead with the strength — 'stability and presence' — before moving toward shadow. Nines can feel flattened if the self-forgetting pattern is introduced before the gift is honored.

- When you get to the self-forgetting, slow down. Ask them to locate it in a specific recent example. Abstract agreement is easy for Nines; embodied recognition is where the work lives.
- Watch for the Nine's characteristic response to the debrief: nodding, agreeing, finding it all interesting — without actually landing anywhere. Gently press for specificity: 'Does this feel true right now, in your actual life?'

Try asking: 'When you said you forget what you actually want — can you think of a recent moment when that happened? What was going on, and what did you do instead?'

3 • DEBRIEFING PATTERNS OF THINKING, FEELING, AND BEHAVING

What to expect and what to watch for as you walk through type patterns.

CENTERS OF INTELLIGENCE

Body Center		0 / 18
Heart Center		0 / 18
Head Center		0 / 18

LIKELY TO RESONATE EASILY

- A natural ability to create calm and safety in environments and relationships
- Genuine empathy and the capacity to hold multiple perspectives without judgment
- A grounded, steady presence that others instinctively trust and find reassuring

MAY TAKE MORE CAREFUL UNPACKING

- Self-forgetting — losing touch with your own priorities, desires, and voice in the process of accommodating others
- Inertia — difficulty initiating action, especially on your own behalf, leading to procrastination or passive drift
- Conflict avoidance — a tendency to go along or stay quiet rather than assert a position, even when your perspective matters deeply

MAY BE HARDEST TO SEE

- The Nine's anger is the most reliably invisible thing in the room. They experience themselves as easygoing and non-confrontational — and they are, most of the time. But the 'sometimes stubborn' from others is the tell: passive resistance is anger that has been rerouted. The client likely has no framework for this yet.
- The self-forgetting operates below conscious awareness. The client named it ('I forget what I actually want') but framing it as forgetting keeps it at a distance — as though it happens to them rather than being a pattern they enact. The harder question is: what does it feel like in the moment just before the forgetting? What are they moving away from?

- The merger pattern — absorbing others' agendas and mistaking them for one's own — can be genuinely invisible to a Nine because it doesn't feel like capitulation. It often feels like agreement, or generosity, or simply not minding either way.

HOW THE CLIENT APPEARS TO MOVE — THE THREE FRAMEWORK SIGNALS

These are cross-referenced patterns that showed up consistently in their responses. Each offers a different lens on the type — worth weaving in conversationally rather than introducing as categories.

SOCIAL STYLE — WITHDRAWING

- As a Withdrawing type, this client tends to pull back from direct engagement with the outer world in favor of an inner (or comfortable, routine-based) reference point. They don't assert or comply — they step back.
- For this client, withdrawal likely shows up as disengagement from their own priorities rather than from relationships — they retreat into the flow of others' agendas or into comfortable routines rather than actively pursuing what they want.
- The 'hard to read' descriptor from others is consistent with the Withdrawing stance: this client's inner world is not easily legible from the outside because they don't bring it forward unprompted.

Weave in: 'When something is bothering you or you're not getting what you need, what do you tend to do? Do you bring it up, step back, or find a way to let it go?'

EMOTIONAL STYLE — POSITIVE OUTLOOK

- As a Positive Outlook type, this client tends to reframe difficulty, minimize negativity, and maintain a pleasant surface — not as denial exactly, but as a genuine orientation toward keeping things okay.
- For a Nine, this shows up as a tendency to narrate things as 'fine' long past the point where they are actually fine — and to genuinely not recognize, in the moment, how much has been suppressed.
- This is part of why the self-forgetting is hard to catch: the Nine's Positive Outlook means the loss of momentum doesn't feel like loss in real time. It often only registers in retrospect.

Weave in: 'Is there something in your life right now that you'd describe as fine — but if you sat with it a bit longer, might actually be something you've been letting go of?'

ATTACHMENT STYLE — ATTACHMENT

- As an Attachment type, this client's sense of identity and security is organized around their connection to a group, relationship, or system. For Nines, this attachment is often to the relational field itself — the felt sense of harmony and belonging.
- The client's strength framing ('I keep things grounded') shows the Attachment pattern: their value is understood in terms of what they provide to a system or group, not in terms of individual achievement.

- The risk of the Attachment pattern for Nines is that their own needs remain perpetually secondary to the maintenance of that connection — and the relationship to self becomes the one that gets most neglected.

Weave in: 'When you think about the people or groups you feel most connected to — what does it cost you to maintain that harmony? What do you hold back or set aside?'

COACHING NOTES FOR THIS SECTION

- Walk through these frameworks slowly and check for landing after each one. The Nine's Positive Outlook means they can engage with all of this intellectually without it touching anything real — your job is to keep asking 'where do you feel that?'
- The anger conversation should be held gently and with curiosity rather than as a revelation. Don't lead with 'Nines have anger they don't recognize' — instead, get to stubbornness first, and let them find the heat underneath it themselves.
- The body probe is important here. Nines can be quite disconnected from somatic experience — numbness, spacing out, and a kind of pleasant blankness are how the Body center dissipates rather than expresses. A body question can be disorienting at first; give it space.

Try asking: 'When you notice yourself going along with something — a decision, a plan, someone else's preference — what happens in your body? Is there any signal there, even a faint one, that something of yours is being set aside?'

4 · DEBRIEFING INSTINCT AND SUBTYPE

Their particular flavor of Type 9, and why it matters.

INSTINCT RANKING

SP NINE — THE SELF-PRESERVATION PEACEMAKER — HOW THE INSTINCT SHAPES THE TYPE

- The SP Nine finds peace through the physical and practical dimensions of life: comfort, routine, familiar pleasures, a stable and manageable environment. Their sense of okay-ness is organized around the reliability of daily life rather than relational harmony or intensity.
- This client's language — 'steady calming presence,' 'stability,' 'grounded' — reflects the SP Nine's orientation: their peace is embodied and environmental. They likely have strong preferences around their physical space, daily rhythms, and the simple things that make life feel manageable.
- SP Nines can appear more self-sufficient and less obviously merger-seeking than other Nines. They may not look like they need much — and often genuinely believe they don't. The self-forgetting happens more quietly, through immersion in comfort and routine rather than in other people's priorities.
- The 'hard to read' descriptor fits SP Nine particularly well: because their merger tends to be internal rather than social, their inner world can be genuinely opaque to others — and sometimes to themselves.

WHY THIS SUBTYPE CAN BE EASY TO MISS

- SP Nine can be misread as a One — they can appear organized, hardworking, and somewhat private, especially if their comfort-seeking looks like conscientiousness from the outside.
- Because SP Nines are less visibly relational than SO Nines, the merger and self-forgetting pattern can be harder to spot. They may present as having clear preferences (they know what routine they like) while the deeper question — what do they actually want for their life — remains unexamined.
- The SP instinct's focus on physical comfort and routine can look like introversion or simply a calm temperament rather than as a survival strategy for maintaining inner peace. The coaching question is always: what is the comfort protecting?
- Nines of all subtypes can score lower on Body center items because they dissipate rather than express anger — the Body center is present but numbed, not absent. Don't mistake quiet for groundedness until you've checked what's underneath.

COACHING NOTES

- Introduce the instinct layer after the type conversation has landed. Once they're with 'I do forget what I want,' you can ask: 'Where do you tend to find comfort when things feel hard?' — and let SP Nine surface through their answer.
- The SP Nine's routines and comfort systems are not trivial details; they are the architecture of their peace. Treat them with curiosity rather than as something to disrupt — the goal is to help the client see what their comfort is organized around, not to take it away.
- One of the most useful SP Nine questions is about what they'd want if they knew it wouldn't create any disruption for anyone — it bypasses the merger pattern and gets at the self underneath the accommodation.

Try asking: 'What are the things in your daily life that you really protect — the routines or comforts that you'd really notice if they were taken away? And what do those things give you?'

5 • DEBRIEFING WINGS, LINES, AND RESOURCES

What they have available, especially under pressure.

STRESS MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 6

- Under stress, Nines move toward Type 6 — and this client confirmed the pattern: increased anxiety, worst-case thinking, and seeking reassurance from trusted others. For a Nine, this is jarring because their baseline is so oriented toward calm; the anxiety of 6-stress can feel like a different person has taken over.
- This is worth naming explicitly in the debrief because it gives the client a map. When they notice themselves scanning for what could go wrong or pulling people in for reassurance, that's useful data — it tells them they've been running on empty for longer than they realized.
- The coaching angle is recognition, not prevention: the goal isn't to never go to 6, but to catch it earlier — before the anxiety has been running for days — and ask what Nine self-care or self-assertion got skipped.

Try asking: 'When you recognize that pattern — the anxiety, the worst-case thinking — how long has it usually been building before you notice it? What was happening in the days or weeks before?

SECURITY MOVEMENT — TOWARD TYPE 3

- In security, Nines move toward Type 3's positive qualities — energy, productivity, and a felt sense of direction and purpose. This client recognized it vividly: 'increased energy, productivity, and a greater sense of direction and accomplishment when feeling supported and safe.'
- This is the Nine's growth edge made concrete: what they're capable of when they're actually resourced. The coaching opportunity is to explore what conditions produced that state — and whether those conditions can be cultivated rather than waited for.
- SP Nines in security often look remarkably different from their resting state — more focused, more decisive, more present to their own agenda. Helping the client recognize and claim this state as also authentically them (not just a lucky mood) is a significant piece of work.

Try asking: 'When you've had that experience of feeling energized and directed — like things were actually moving — what was present in your life at that time? What had shifted?'

WINGS — TYPE 8 AND TYPE 1

- Type 9's wings are Type 8 and Type 1. These are very different flavors, and which wing is more active will significantly shape how this Nine presents.
- The Eight wing (9w8) tends to produce a Nine with more groundedness and willingness to assert — they can access the Eight's directness and power when needed, even if their default is still Nine softness. The Eight wing can make a Nine look more decisive and even stubborn (which fits this client's 'sometimes stubborn' descriptor).
- The One wing (9w1) tends to produce a Nine with a stronger inner critic, more attention to correctness and order, and a tendency toward idealism. They may have a quiet but persistent sense of how things should be — and can be harder on themselves than a 9w8.
- Let the client lead on wings — introduce both briefly and ask which feels more familiar. Don't over-weight this until the core type has fully landed.

Try asking: 'Between having a stronger sense of what's right and how things should be done, versus having a stronger sense of your own power and the ability to push back when needed — which of those feels more like a resource you sometimes draw on?'

6 • IF THE CONVERSATION GOES SIDEWAYS

What to do depending on how they receive the hypothesis.

IF THEY RESONATE STRONGLY

- When the client strongly agrees, the risk is that you've gotten Nine-style agreement rather than real landing. Move from 'yes, that's me' to 'where do I actually see this in my life' — specificity is the test of genuine recognition.

- If they're resonating with the shadow (self-forgetting), invite them to name a specific cost: 'What has losing your own momentum actually meant for you — in your work, your relationships, your sense of where your life is going?' This converts recognition into motivation.
- The security movement is a useful place to go when there's strong resonance — it gives them something to move toward rather than just a pattern to understand.

When you hear all of this, what's the most important thing you want to change or bring forward in your life right now?

IF THEY PUSH BACK OR DISAGREE

- Don't defend the hypothesis. If they push back, get curious: 'What doesn't fit for you? What feels off?' — and mean it. Their resistance is data.
- The most likely alternate type for this client is Type 2 — also warm, relational, and oriented toward others. The key distinction is motivational: the Two is driven by the need to be needed and to give in order to receive love, while the Nine is driven by the need for peace and tends to give as a way of avoiding conflict or maintaining harmony.
- If they're identifying more with Type 2, ask about giving: 'When you help someone, what's the feeling underneath it — a pull toward them and wanting to be close, or more of a wanting to keep things smooth and not have anyone upset?' That question usually produces a clear response.
- You can also return to the 'hard to read' and 'sometimes stubborn' descriptors from others — those are less consistent with Type 2 than with Type 9. Twos tend to be more readable and more directly relational in their approach.

Most likely alternate type: Type 2 — The Helper

Key distinguishing question: The key question is: does this client give and accommodate in order to be loved and stay close, or in order to maintain peace and avoid the discomfort of conflict or assertion?

IF THEY'RE CONFUSED OR NEED MORE CLARITY

- If confusion is present, find the foothold: return to 'I lose my own momentum; I forget what I actually want.' Ask them to tell you about a time that happened — not define it, just tell the story. The Nine pattern will be visible in the telling.
- Treat what doesn't fit as equally useful: 'The part that doesn't resonate — tell me about that. What feels like it belongs to a different description?' This often surfaces the wing or instinct layer, not a different type.
- Confusion in a Nine can sometimes be the Nine pattern itself operating in the room — going along, not wanting to land on something that might be wrong, deferring to the coach's reading. Name it gently if you sense it.

What part of this description feels most true to you right now — not most interesting, but most true? And what, if anything, feels like it doesn't quite fit?
